The City Commissioners hold an important session to-night.

Mr. H. J. Williams, who formerly lived here, but is now living in Winston, was on a visit to his old friends here yesterday and the day before. He is looking remarkably well.

We had news from the Chicago Convention just before going to press last evening, but the news was so unimportant—that nothing had been done—we omitted all reference to it.

ATTENTION.—There will be a meeting of the General Committee of the Firemans Celebration Association this evening at 8:30 o'clock, at the Benbow House. C. H. IRELAND, Secretary.

Mr. William S. Beard the father of Mrs. S. L. Spencer of South Greensboro, died in his 68th year at his home near Jamestown, June 16.

He was a member of the church of Friends. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Albert Peele.

Primitive.

It is true that there have been many marked improvements within the space of forty years, and even far less than forty. Yet there are some people who have not joined in the forward march, but have in many things remained stationary. The log cabin of the olden time remains pretty much as it was, and may yet be found in certain sections of the country, not excepting Guilford. One peculiarity of the old time cabin was the absence of sash and glass windows, and in many cases there was no outlet of any sort except through the doors, there being generally two doors opposite each other. To us it appears strange, though no doubt the builders of such houses could give a reason for what seems to us a species of folly.

Life within the walls of such a home must have been amazingly simple. We cannot imagine the trimming of the midnight lamp, or the trimming of anything that conveys the idea of mental improvement. They may have been an old fashioned tallow dip, but even such an appliance as that was often found wanting. The fire on the hearth was the great, and often the only, dispenser of light and heat, or there may have been a censer-shaped iron bowl filled with lard in which a cotton string was inserted, one end burning to give light in case of special need, as in sickness. There was propriety then in those wide fire places reaching nearly across one end of the house, affording room for the children of the family, during the coldest weather, to occupy what was known as the "jam." Very possibly the phrase "jam up," which we still hear in our day, originated in the custom referred to. A cabin that had space enough to contain two beds, a spinning wheel, a big blue chest, a cradle and a few cooking utensils, was considered quite sufficient. The old flint and steel fowling piece lodged over the door in a rude wooden rack, fastened to the wall, and the powder horn hung near it.

That there should still be built in this country, here and there, houses after the same old pattern, would seem very strange, yet if we could hear and duly weigh all the arguments used to justify the practice, we might hesitate to condemn what has seemed so odd.

If man "wants but little here below, Nor wants that little long," very many of the numerous things which men provide for themselves could easily be dispensed with. If life in primitive times was too empty, may it not now be too full? Is it not true that the modern housekeeper bears an almost intolerable burden of service, much of it outside of the really necessary? Has not what we term progress in social affairs, in many cases increased instead of removing burdens?

It would be worth while, we think to scrutinize well all styles of "fresh importation," examining well their claims to be adopted, having an eye to the main purpose of life in our creation as rational and responsible beings.

It must ever be a sad thought that the very best endeavors of men seem to be, generally, to live handsomely and in stylish independence, in seeming disregard of the voice which comes up every day from the vaults of departed glory: "All flesh is grass, and the glory of man as the flower of grass." There has been great improvement in many things, we confess, but though there have been many embellishments hung about our doorways, making them beautiful and attractive, yet we should not forget that the most flowery paths of our feet lead out to "the house appointed for all the living."

It will not, in a little while hence, signify anything whether we have lived in a palace or a cot.
