What to Do with Convicts.

The perplexing state of affairs connected with the State penitentiary is something calculated to put people to thinking. The Biblical Recorder, which has a very sensible article on the subject, says:

Apparently, the only solution is to have no criminals. We think there is one country which makes a criminal offences subject to capital punishment. A man is not bound to be a criminal. If he will be one, society should neither be aggravated by his practices, if at large, nor be taxed for his sustenance if confined.

Evidently there is need for more wisdom than any man among us seem to possess, but the conclusion would seem to be irresistible that while humanity has devised the penitentiary, the result of it is to make the criminal partially comfortable while the taxpayer is made to suffer in paying for his support. We have always held that it is wrong to attempt to punish the guilty by confinement, for besides being a failure as a means of reformation, it is an oppression upon those who are taxed for the support of the institution. If, therefore, such results as follow the penitentiary system were to attend upon any other State institution—a failure to reform the subject or to prevent crime, and the levying of increased burdens upon the taxpayer—such institution would, we think, deserve to be voted a failure. It is an alarming fact that so many of the most desperate crimes done in the State are committed by persons who have served one or more terms in the penitentiary.

The question, however, seems to be how to run the penitentiary so as that it may not be a burden on the taxpayer, while we think the question should be, "is not a penitentiary system for North Carolina in itself a necessary failure?"

A people who had tried the whipping post and found it effective, and then suffered themselves to be ridiculed out of it by persons who claimed to have superior intelligence and humanity to that of Moses, might expect to be confronted by just such a question as now comes up for solution—"What shall be done with our convicts?"

—Mr. Geo. S. Wills came up from Chapel Hill last night, and went up to Charlotte this morning in the interest of a voluntary missionary movement which has taken hold upon a number of the University students, and which, judging from the character of the persons engaged in it, bids fair to accomplish much good. Success to such a praiseworthy enterprise.
