The train from Fayetteville last evening, was somewhat behind time.

The weather for today: North Carolina, colder, northeast winds; local rains.

On account of the mud a great many of our news items are somewhat local.

Too Many Such.

A man from the country who was here today asking alms of the people laid out enough muscular force in trudging over the muddy roads to have made head way for himself. He belonged to that class of beggars who think that the public owes them such a living that they need only go around and gather it in, and if one fails to give they are not exactly honest. There are too many such.

That Smart Little Dog.

The smart little dog on Greene street continues on the sick list, and appears to be not much if any better for the medicine he has taken. After taking liquid medicine out of a spoon he was put on pills which he swallowed with all readiness without complaint, and without making any wry faces. The pills were put up specially for this little dog at the drug store. But it is doubtful if little doggie ever gets over his present sickness. What ails him no one really knows. It may be the distemper or the grip.

One Way to Look at it.

The Chinese are superior to the negroes in capacity for self government, in intellectual achievements and in most of the qualities required for the higher types of civilization. Consequently, if the Chinese are to be excluded, and those now here are to be kept in subjection as a menace to American institutions, how can Southerners be blamed for refusing to submit to negro supremacy.—Boston Herald.

The Two Villains.

A special to the Richmond Times from Floyd Courthouse, Va., under date of yesterday, gives a number of particulars concerning the two villains from Mount Airy.

The two robbers rode quietly through the streets of the town late Sunday evening, taking the road to Christiansburg, and about midnight the pursuers passed through on the trail. They procured a lantern and proceeded. Reaching Hawery's, six miles from Floyd Courthouse, they found the fugitives. McKnight raised a window of the second story of the house, sprang out and fled, and was fired on several times without effect. Taylor was found under the bed. He detailed in a boasting manner the circumstances of the robbery. McKnight is spoken of as a travelling showman.

Taylor said they were on their way to the Hatfield and McCoy country—on the borders of West Va. and Kentucky. McKnight is reported to be armed with two pistols and a large knife. The suspicion was entertained at Floyd Courthouse that if McKnight is found in the ivy cliff he will never be heard of again.

Marriage Last Night.

Mr. J. C. Murchison, and Miss L. Lillian McDonald, both of this city, were married last night, at West Washington street Baptist church, at 7:30 o'clock, Rev. W. B. Wingate officiating. The church had been beautifully decorated for the occasion, and was filled to overflowing with people, some having to stand outside who could not find room inside the church.

After the ceremony was performed and they had received the congratulations of a number of friends, the bride and groom took the south bound train for a tour through Florida. They were accompanied on their tour by Messrs. W. C. Dodson and Wm. Pemberton.

The bride and groom are well known in this city, the groom being master of trains on the C. F. & Y. V. R. R., and the bride being among our most popular young ladies.

How It Originated.

Some one asked a WORKMAN reporter on yesterday what was the origin of the expression, "Say nothing and saw wood," and the reporter was humiliated, after fumbling awhile, to find that he didn't have the article. The fact is, since we come to think of it, "the main important point," as Wesley Smith would say, is not to know how the saying originated, but to "say nothing and saw wood." It generally pays well to saw wood, and often times it pays well for a man to keep his mouth shut. If a man is hired to saw wood, sawing wood is his source of income. Another man is paid for talking, and by a proper division of labor the talking and the sawing are kept separate, as they ought to be.

The Capital Case.

The trial of John Sellers for the murder of Sam Brooks was begun this morning. It was difficult to obtain a jury, but this was at last effected and the case was opened. Judge David Schenck, and David Schenck, Jr., Col. Jas. E. Boyd appear for the defendant, and the State is represented by Solicitor Parker assisted by Mr. John A. Bevinger.

Only some half dozen witnesses had been examined by 3:30 o'clock. The room is densely packed with spectators. The man Sellers does not betray any great deal of emotion and his face tells nothing. His figure is remarkably dark.
