WHO THREW A BRICK AT CROSS KEYS?

A Place of Active Business Life in the Limits of Polk County.

Editor Polk County News:

I recently overheard the question: "Where is Cross Keys?" For the enlightenment of the ignorant, I wish to state, through the medium of your spicy paper, that Cross Keys is a very important locality, second to Columbus only during court. It is situated in Polk county, N. C., and bounded on the north by the horizon, east by the Dunkard church, South by the richest gold mine on earth, and west by Mart. Cornwell's.

You can buy a lot, the lumber to build your house, and store goods for your general use at Cross Keys for cash or eggs.

Mart. Miller and Walt. Daniel will dole you out your daily mail and you can telephone to South Carolina if you can awaken the "Hello Girl."

You should visit Cross Keys and buy a lot before the railroad is built through the town.

At Cross Keys you can be a Dunkard or a Baptist, as you like.

No one was injured at Cross Keys by the comet.

Some of the families about Cross Keys are evidently in favor of one of Roosevelt's policies.

If you ever desire a political job, come to Cross Keys and make our acquaintance.

The moonshine is not as glaring at Cross Keys as it once was, yet the thirsty denizen manages to make out.

Yours, in haste,
"JOSH."
