433 HOUSE MEMBERS.

Democrats Put Through Reapportionment Bill,

Washington .- Under the reapportionment bill, which for the second time passed the house, the size of that body is increased to 433 members, giving Georgia one additional member.

The measure again goes to the senate to try its fate there. At the last session the senate failed to approve the increase in the size of the lower branch of congress. What it will do this time is somewhat problematical, but the strong hope is entertained that the senate will permit the house membership to have its way in this regard.

Representative Bell, who is a member of the committee on census which reported the bill, said there was some talk in the committee of making the membership 431 or an increase of 40, but that would have cut lowa and Maine out of one member each, and that aroused considerable opposition, thinks should be remedied. The problems of child and woman labor intimately affect the general welfare of the coming generation, and it cannot be solved without the help of an educated public opinion. It was largely for the purpose of instituting an educational propaganda that the conference was called.

In commenting upon the Georgia law on child labor, Miss Jean M. Gordon, secretary of the conference, said: 'You have a statute here which permits an orphan child of any age to tatives has treated the reciprocity work. child on the stage and said that she considered the cheap theatrical and vaudeville houses the worst possible influence on a young person's life. "Young girls," she said, "are hired or no other reason than their good looks and ability to kick. When they have lost their youthful beauty they are useless for any kind of honest work. They have acquired a taste for champagne, or, rather, beer, dinners and things of that sort, and cannot go back to a simple, orderly life. They have found 'the easiest way.'
