"Plant Trees - Grow Jobs" Campaign Plan To Reforest Tennessee Valley States

The most major offensive in the "Plant Trees - Grow Jobs" campaign is underway, the rate of reforestation in the seven Tennessee Valley states is now under way.

Workmen in the state tree nurseries have begun the winter-long task of lifting, bundling and shipping half a billion infant trees which by the turn of the century can become the basic raw material providing jobs for five thousand persons.

In Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia, this is the beginning of the tree planting season, the first since the gigantic reforestation drive was announced jointly this fall by the governors of the seven Tennessee Valley states and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The "Plant Trees - Grow Jobs" slogan is significant. It means that everybody, not just the landowners, has a stake in providing the raw materials for future industries. The landowners get the immediate income from the sale of pulpwood and timber, but our children and grandchildren get the jobs in wood-using industries.

Foresters figure that each 1,000 acres of planted pine trees provide the base for 10 new jobs in industry. That is the basis of the calculation that the half billion seedlings which will be shipped from nurseries this season will be the materials from which five thousand persons will obtain gainful occupations in industries making paper, boxes, furniture, houses and hundreds of other wood-based products.

By planting ten billion trees in the next seven years, these seven states can provide raw material for industries employing 100,000 persons.

birthday cake and having the honor of cutting the first slice for himself. Following the refreshments, Henry Clay opened his birthday gifts, assisted by his sister, Renee.

The Georgia Forestry Commission and the Extension Service began publication and distribution of special information materials.

Announcement of Kentucky's participation in the program was made before the Conservation Congress at Louisville, Ky.

One of the most ambitious programs of reforestation was prepared by the Elk River Development Association, which had a head start on the project through organization of a Forestry Work Group even prior to announcement of the program.

Tree-Grow Jobs. The nation's most extensive activities can serve as a model for other areas where planting is not so well advanced.

The Work Group announced a goal of planting a million seedlings per county per year. Fiscal year 1963 will be a week of special emphasis February 1st during which newspapers and radio stations are cooperating in the promotional effort. Community club and civic groups are being asked to participate by spreading information.

Both the Tennessee Farm Bureau Federation and the Tennessee Federation of Women's Clubs adopted resolutions giving the plan their backing.

The Bear Creek (Alabama) Development Association, through its membership, plans to plant seedlings on 7,500 acres in that watershed this season. A full-time seedling salesman is on the job.

The Tishomingo County (Mississippi) Agricultural Coordinating Council held a Forestry Field Day at which Governor Barnett addressed a crowd of several hundred persons and scores of visitors participated in a conducted bus tour of nearby forestry demonstration projects.
