Garden Time

By M. E. Gardner

We have a comparatively new project in the Experiment Station which is designed to collect and test new crops which may be of interest and economic importance to North Carolina. Dr. W. T. Fike is coordinator for North Carolina in the southern region of 13 states.

One of these crops is the sunflower. I want to briefly discuss this crop with you because you might want to try it with some of your neighbors. I suggest this procedure because a group could produce enough seed to attract the trade without any one in the group becoming too heavily involved in the beginning.

Sunflower seed is used primarily as a source of oil and as wild bird food. Dr. Fike seems to think that the wild food idea is the best for North Carolina growers. The wholesale price of seed has been 10-14 cents per pound for the past few years. Ten cents for the smaller seed and 14 cents for the larger.

Variety test plot at Plymouth and Rocky Mount have recorded yields of 1,000-1,600 pounds per acre; 1,000, 2,000 pounds per acre at Salisbury; and 2,500 - 2,900 pounds per acre at Laurel Springs. These tests indicate that higher yield may be expected in the Piedmont and mountain than in eastern Carolina.

Any soil that will produce corn is adapted to sunflower seed production. The fertilizer requirements are also the same. The seed should be planted about April 1 in the Coastal Plain; April 15 in the Piedmont; and May 1 in the mountains.

There are dwarf and giant varieties. The dwarf sorts grow to a height of about six feet while the giant varieties may reach 12 feet. The giant varieties usually produce larger yields in North Carolina than do the dwarf types.

The amount of seed per acre will depend on the variety used and the
