You're the Loser!

When a private power company takes away the best areas served by a locally-owned rural electric cooperative, the remaining members lose... so does the general public... so do the members who are denied the right to continue serving themselves.

Here's why:

Because of the small income per mile of line, for many years the cooperatives operated in the red. In recent years, as more people moved onto their lines, the cooperatives began showing a margin up and above operating expenses. As this happened—and continues to happen—the cooperatives reduced their rates.

If the margins are reduced by taking away the good areas as soon as they become thickly settled, the cooperative's ability to repay debt and lower rates is reduced. The lost members who lived on the lines in the lean years will not be there to enjoy the good years of low-cost electricity. And there may not be many good years, because the scattered remaining members will have to share the high fixed cost of investment. Instead of a trend toward lower-cost power, the trend will be upward.

And the power companies will no longer face the influence of a good, LOCALLY-OWNED example to curb their rates—which will make YOU a loser, too.
