Outdoor Preparation Of Meats

Charcoaling outside adds to variety in meal preparation, and is an opportunity to have the entire family participate in preparing the meal. Now that summer is here, more informal meals will be prepared outside.
 John Christian, food science extension specialist at State College, says homemakers should keep in mind the kinds of meat that lend themselves to outdoor cooking.
 "In the beef line, you can use rib, club, tripe, porchouse, or sirloin steaks one-inch thick," he says. "And of course hot dogs and cube steaks are good. The ground beef should be 80 per cent lean and 20 per cent fat and be freshly ground."
 Christian says pork can be cooked outside by charcoaling or barbecuing. Cuts that charcoal well are pork chops which are preferably boneless. These should be cut 1-2 to 3-4 inches thick. It is important to select pork with marbling (fat within the muscle), chops with a large rib eye muscle, and pork that is fresh and bright. Cured pork such as ham slices, cottage roll or sliced picnic shoulder are also good for broiling. All pork must be cooked well done.
 "All cuts from lamb can be broiled as long as young and tender," says Christian. "Cuts in the most demand are rib and loin chops, shoulder chops, and leg steaks. The breasts of lamb usually are broiled and barbecue sauce added."
 Christian emphasizes that the cooking time is important. All steaks to be cooked rare or medium rare should be cooked from 12 to 15 minutes total time. The best way to determine degree of doneness is to cut the steak to see the degree of pinkness.
 He warns that all pork must be cooked well done and will take 45 minutes to 1-2 hours, depending on thickness of cut and intensity of the heat. Lamb should be cooked medium to well-done. The distance from the coals depends on the amount of heat, but usually will be 6 to 7 inches.

Garden Time

While driving from Raleigh to Marion several days ago I noticed quite a good number of mimosa trees which appeared to be healthy and covered with the beautiful silky flowers characteristic of this plant. These trees were growing in yards bordering Highway 64 between Pittsboro and Asheboro, as I remember. I also saw a number of skeletons in fields which had been killed by wilt.
 If you have mimosas which are vigorous I would suggest that you observe them closely. It is possible that natural resistance to the wilt organism is present in these trees and they may be worth propagating.
 If you especially like the mimosa and have lost your trees, you may wish to try some of the various which are wilt resistant: Charlotte, Tryon and US No. 64. Your local nurseryman may be able to refer you to a source of supply of these resistant sorts.
 If you want a tree somewhat similar to the mimosa in growth habit, I would suggest Moraine locust. This is a graceful tree but does not have the showy flowers of the mimosa; neither does it have the objectionable seed pods produced by the honey locust.
 If you planted any of the evergreens last spring keep them well supplied with water. A mulch would help. This is true also for any of the deciduous plants set in the spring.
 children of Faison were last Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Langston.
 Robert Brock spent Thursday night in Warsaw with Mrs. Annie Brock, Little Kimberly Jernigan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Jernigan has been quite sick this week.
