HUNTING REGULATIONS FOR 1963 - 1964
Raleigh, N. C. - Tar Heel hunters will have a greatly simplified squirrel season this fall. At a meeting of the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission held in Raleigh last week, 99 counties were included in a uniform squirrel season, beginning October 15 and ending January 1.

ONE DATE for the entire season was set at 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. in all counties. The decision for the state-wide season was based on research which showed that Tar Heel squirrels produce young twice a year, usually in March and July. It was also found that very few of the March broods are around for the gun season in the fall, while the July crop furnishes most of the fall hunting.

All across the state, most of the July squirrels are weaned by the middle of October. Biologists believe that since the squirrel's only one of the several factors in squirrel mortality, the hunting season should begin when the late crop has left the nest. This will give the sportsman more hunting that previously has been lost because of food shortages, inclement weather, and predators.

Hunting regulations, such as the new squirrel season, are decided upon only after a series of nine public hearings across the state. At these hearings, the Commission presents its proposals, based on sound biological principles and careful research. Hunters, landowners, and other interested parties are invited to attend these hearings, discuss these proposals and express their own opinions. Having aired their proposals, and heard the reaction of hunters across the state, the Commission assembles in Raleigh with the staff of Clyde P. Patton, Executive Director of the Commission, and sets regulations designed to give hunters the best possible harvest and assure a supply of game for the future.

Another change is the wild turkey season. Still hunters only, but running from January 2 to February 15, this new arrangement, though shorter, gives the turkey hunter a better chance to enjoy his sport with less of his favorite game being taken by the relatively non-specialized squirrel and deer hunters. This group, in prior years, has been "incidental turkey hunters", bagging a good many turkeys when

Stallings Named Civil Defense Specialist
A full-time civil defense specialist has been named for the Agricultural Extension Service at North Carolina State, according to an announcement by Director R. W. Shoffner.

ERNEST M. STALLINGS, veteran extension worker, assumed duties as civil defense specialist June 1. In this capacity, Stallings will direct the program designed to educate rural and small town people in civil defense, according to Howard Ellis, in charge of extension agricultural engineering at N. C. State.

Ellis has been serving as acting head of the rural civil defense program. A native of Goldsboro, Stallings relinquished his position as cotton marketing specialist to accept the new position.

In explaining the civil defense program that has been designed for rural and small town residents, Ellis pointed out that it is a cooperative effort of the U. S. Office of Civil Defense and the Agricultural Extension Service.

"Stallings will be the program leader in conducting educational

HE'S RUNNING TO STAY AHEAD OF YOU!

Reddy is always on the move at CP&L . . . increasing his ability to serve you and your neighbors. From a capacity of 64,000 horsepower in 1920, he's grown to more than 2 1/2 million.

We've spent almost $250 million during the last decade . . . growing to keep ahead of your demands. We plan to spend another $200 million for new facilities during the next five years.

Everytime we grow . . . whether by adding a new generating plant or just adding another customer . . . EVERYONE benefits. Because our growth means larger tax payments to local, state and federal governments. It means more dollars for schools, defense and other essential services. As we grew during the last 10 years, our annual tax payments more than doubled—from $11 million to $23 million.

You can count on CP&L to keep Reddy on the move . . . ready to supply all the electricity you'll ever need . . . while helping you build a Finer Carolina.
