Garden Time

A co-worker called and said that a bean had been sent to him for identification. He thought it was a "Jack" bean and wanted to know whether or not it was edible. When he described it, I was sure it was a Jack bean because we get one or two most every year. I think I have reported on this before but another time may get the word around.

The Jack bean, a bean-like plant, (Canavalia ensiformis) is also called the Chickahaw lima. This bean is sometimes grown in the South for stock feed and is passable for use as a snapbean when the pods are from four-six inches long. The mature pods may be 14 inches long. In warm climates it is a bushy plant with little tendency to climb.

"Please tell me what I can use to control grass in the driveway and between the joints of the concrete walk in front of the house." Varol as a wetting spray. This is easy to use and there is no spray drift problem. It may be purchased from some filling stations. Adjust your nozzle to give a coarse spray and thoroughly wet the blades of grass or weeds. May take more than one treatment for complete kill.

A mother called me at home last night about her little girl who had been chewing a fruit of the Jerusalem Cherry. She, of course, was concerned and wanted to know whether or not there was any danger involved. I told her there was none but to place the plant out of reach.

The Jerusalem Cherry (Solanum Pseudo capsicum) is grown as a pot plant for its showy fruits. It belongs to a large group of plants, potato, tomato, pepper, eggplant, red Solanum, which includes the Irish Potato, pepper eggplant, red pepper and some of the medicinal plants. It is commonly referred to as the Nightshade Family.

Some of the lants in this group, it being such a large family, are reported to have toxic qualities, some of which may be somewhat exaggerated.

Dr. James W. Hardin has prepared a bulletin on poisonous plants of North Carolina and you may wish to have a copy. If you do, you might first check with your county agent. If he does not have it, write to me and I will have one sent to you. If you prefer, write directly to the Division of Publications, State College Station, Raleigh, N. C. and ask for Experiment Station Bulletin No 414 - Poisonous Plants of North Carolina.
