your PHARMACIST MESSAGE

BY: SAM CAVENAUGH

If you were to witness the control room activity of a missile shoot you might marvel at the dials, controls, connections and message-sending apparatus necessary to get the bird off its pad. However, the body you pack around so matter-of-factly contains a control and message system so complex as to make a missile effort look like kindergarden stuff.

The body contains billions of nerve cells, or neurons, with billions of connections. Around the outside of the cerebrum, the largest part of the brain, are about nine billion neurons. Since it is necessary for each of these cells to make connection with several other cells, you can readily understand the fantastic number of connections involved in this one area of the human system.

You can readily understand, also, the importance of accuracy in the filing of your prescriptions. This work is a specialty at Sam's Drug Store, Rose Hill. Try us. Phone 289-2440.

THIS WEEK'S HOUSEHOLD HINT: Try lining the bottom of your vegetable bin with two layers of paper toweling, it will prevent the vegetables from spoiling.
