Take Soil Samples Now

"Trying to produce better crops and increase profits without a sound soil testing program is like heading off on a vacation trip across country without a road map."

"And Autumn is the best time to take a soil test," explains Norfleet L. Sugg, assistant vice president and agronomist of Planters Cotton Oil Company here. He lists four key reasons for testing at this time of the year:

1. Soils are in the best physical condition for sampling. Laboratories are less busy and can pay more attention to each sample.
2. Most farmers can find time to collect samples without postponing other important work.
3. Finally, soil testing now permits farmers to spread lime and some fertilizer in the fall, getting a head start on their spring work.
4. "Soil tests are important to every farmer's program," Sugg notes, "but they play a particularly vital role when a top producer seeks the maximum profit from his land."
5. "The superior farmer has different requirements from those of the average or marginal farm operator. He has maintained a superior soil structure over the years and as a result, can achieve top yields by adopting a super premium fertilizer. Others can increase their profits just by applying more fertilizer."

1. Use a soil tube or auger for best results. A garden spade or trowel may be used. A clean pall is a must to avoid contamination of soil samples.
2. Don't sample unusual areas which may not be representative of the general field conditions. Sample these areas separately.
3. Divide fields into sample areas not more than 10 acres in size. Sample separately all areas differing in crop growth, soil color or past management.

6. Mix samples from area well in pall and fill sample boxes. If using your own bags or cartons, make certain they are clean and numbered for future reference. Clean pall before sampling next area.
7. Fill out information sheet completely and accurately. Test value depends upon having all pertinent data on farm property.
8. Make a sketch of property and mark all test areas for later reference when planning fertilization based on test results.
9. Follow recommendations, which are scientifically computed to meet needs of your farm for maximum production in the future.
