Bet you didn't know sand was magnetic. It's a fact, And not only sand but certain dirt, pebbles gravel, and rocks in addition to the normally magnetic force, and not just on peo-ple with a yen to bronze their dermal layers.
This astounding discovery was made by the United States was made by the United States Coast Guard not long ago in tests off the coast of New Jersey. Here's what they did, in essence. They steamed out out some 15 miles offshore armed with considerable rubbish, then dumped the junk over the side. They watched it sail away on the wind and waves, tracked it to find out where tracked it to find out where, if anywhere, it went, and made the discovery known for years by shorefront property owners. Yup, that rubbish, as if drawn magnetically, made its way to-ward land and was washed up on the beaches.

ALONZO PATE MOUNT OLIVE - Funeral services for Alonzo Pate, 60, of Mt. Olive, Rt. 2, who died Tues-day, were held Thursday at 3 p. m. at the home with the Rev. R. A. Thompson, Baptist min-ister of Calypso, officiating. Burial was in Maplewood Ceme-

Surviving are his wife, the former Hettie Pate; two sons, Robert Lee and Alonzo D., both of Rt. 2, Mount Olive; a step son, O. Albert Outlaw of Raleigh; a daughter, Mrs. Dorothy Pate Hinson of Mount Olive; a brother, Lorenzo Pate of Rt. 2, Faison; and a sister, Mrs. Bessie Grantham of Rt. 4.

Why did the Coast Guard do this? To prove that the garbage the lonely lifeguards rake up each morning by the bushel is not all from sloppy picnickers and bathers. A lot of it comes fro mthoughtless boatmen. The fro mthoughtless boatmen. The State of New Jersey wanted to be sure of this before they began their crackdown on litterboats. As soon as the facts were in, they cracked down hard seven arrests and five convictive less than the seven arrests and five convictive less than the seven arrests and five convictive less than the seven are for violation. tions last summer for violation of the state code prohibiting the discharge in any way of any refuse that might tend to pollute the water or the beach es. The fines ran up to $150 per, which made for pretty exper, which made for pretty expensive days on the water for those boaters. The culprits were nabbed by flying marine police who spotted the violation from a helicopter and radioed a patrol boat to get to the spot on the double. They went to a lot of trouble to stop boaters toesing paper cups over but tossing paper cups over, but they'd had their craw full of complaints from landlubbers and couldn't seem to stop the littering any other way, Imagine what the fines would run if the state decided to recover the cost of operating the chop-per and patrol boats from the guilty parties!

The point is, each and every boatman should take it upon himself or herself to assure a continuing supply of clean, boatsble water. I admit, the temptation is great to just toss that empty sandwich bag or used up pack of smokes over the fantail into the briney deep. Somehow when you're out on all the beautiful water (that you wouldn't drink without boiling it first) it just doesn't seem possible that one scrap of paper or one spent booze bottle will bother anybody except Davey Jones, "I'll sink sooner or later," you think as you flick it over the side. But find out sometime if it really did sink. Ask the lifeguards who rake it up, or the shorefront property owners who spend Sunday afternoon picking it off their beach, or the bather who's nursing six stitches in his foot from the jagged hunk of bot-tie he stepped on last week. That stuff didn't sink. Truckloads of "unsinkables" cated to the town dumps every

"Oh, come off it," you say. "I don't throw that much overboard. Heck, I'm only out on weekends, like everybody else. What's a couple of gum wrap-pers?" Not much, I'll agree. But if they were lying around your front yard, you'd pick them up pretty quick. So, consider the water you boat on as your front yard and maybe you'll see that there's not much difference. Consider, too, the mess that would result if all the 2,000 boats berthed at Seat-

tide turned and started out the harbor entrance, you'd have the biggest can jam you've ever

Like the signs along the high-way - "Every litter bit hurts," and they don't mean it hurts just the scenery. When you're talking about the trash trail left on the water by some fleets, the ones that get hurt are the oatmen not only face a pos sible fine in some communi-ties - federal codes also call for fines, ranging up to 2,500 for dumping refuse into fed-erally controlled waters - but also run the risk of losing their playground. This very nearly happened in the Raritan Bay area of New Jersey and the ugly prospect might rear its mangy head elsewhere if boatmen don't shape up and mend their ways. How would you feel if you'd just plunked down 4,500 clams for a real jewel of a rig only to have the city, town, county, or state where you want to use it tell you you can't because the public is sick of lying on a mound of garbage when they sunbathe?

Laws won't stop the abuse of the waterways, but they can stop the use of them. Littering is a simple habit to break, if you just think twice. If you own a boat, chances are you have the habit. Which would you rather give up?
