To Move Schoolhouse In Colonial Edenton

Edenton, N. C. - Parson Daniel Earl's schoolhouse at Bandon Plantation will be moved to the James Iredell property in Edenton in honor of novelist Inglis Fletcher.

The 18th century building in Chowan County. The school has been a favorite of the thousands of visitors to Bandon each year. The building will be moved down the Chowan River some 10 miles to Edenton in April.

The 63 acre estate has been sold to Southern Properties Inc., developers of Arrowhead Beach next to Bandon. The company at the request of the Edenton Chamber of Commerce donated the schoolhouse to the town provided it be moved. The Edenton Tea Party Chapter, DAR, has assumed the moving of the building to the Iredell property.

W. S. Tarlton, historic sites superintendent of N. C. Department of Archives and History, said, the "building will make a valuable addition to the Iredell restoration as well as saving a relic of Bandon and will be an appropriate memento of Mrs. Fletcher".

She often retired to the schoolhouse to write her books, which have brought world attention to the state's early history. Placing the school on the Iredell property is appropriate because Mrs. Fletcher as a chapter member was primarily responsible for saving the James Iredell House.

Moving the building and constructing a foundation will cost about $1,500. Mrs. J. P. Ricks, Jr., the chapter regent, stated. Contributions are being sought as the chapter's funds are limited, she said, due to other restoration work in progress. She suggested that readers of Mrs. Fletcher's books express their appreciation by making a donation payable to the Edenton Tea Party Chapter, Box 508, Edenton, North Carolina.
