Soil

such a problem exists.

A strongly acid soil condition is a rather common occurrence in soil areas around the home, especially where no lime has been used. This condition results in poor growth and provides a more favorable soil environment for some undesirable weeds and grasses. This is easily detected by a soil test and can be corrected with lime. Subsoils are usually strongly acid, consequently, where soils from basements have been distributed over the yard, lime is generally needed. The amount of lime to use must be determined by a soil test as it is possible to use too much lime and create other problems.

The problem of over liming frequently occurs around the foundations of homes. The mortar used in laying bricks and discarded scraps of plaster board frequently contain liming material. When this is mixed with the soil around the foundation of a home, the soil pH can rise to the alkaline range above seven. If the pH gets too high, plant nutrient imbalances can occur and cause problems. This is a rather difficult situation to deal with. However, a soil test can identify such problems and corrective procedures will be suggested. Sometimes it is desirable to replace the soil.

It should be remembered that there are many pests that injure plants and cause poor growth. There are very effective chemicals available for control of insects, blights and others. Simple spray programs are available and should be used for best growth of plants. When using these chemicals, play it safe by following the directions on the containers and store them in a safe place away from children.

If you have growth problems, want to make new plantings or maintain present plantings, see your County Agricultural Agent for soil sample cartons and sampling instructions.

DALL REUNION
Sunday when the Dalls met in reunion for the eleventh year at Oak Ridge Community center, the Rev. M. C. Frank, pastor of Garners Chapel Baptist Church, spoke briefly to the group on Framing Life in Wider Margins. The speaker read portions of Genesis and Hebrew in connection with his subject "Unless a vision is seen ahead we are not framing our lives to wider margins", Mr. Frank reminded those listening. His remarks were followed with prayer.

Meeting was opened with a musical prelude by Mrs. William Sullivan, Jimmy Ward, president of the clan said words of welcome, William Sullivan gave the invocation. Congregation sang "Come Thou Almighty King". Mrs. William Sullivan was acting secretary in the absence of secretary. A count was made of the youngest, oldest and those travelling longest distances. Cindy Dall, 1-1/2 year old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Dall of Goldsboro was the youngest. Ivey Sullivan, 81 years old of Oak Ridge Community was the oldest member present. The family traveling the longest distance of 360 miles was Mr. and Mrs. Johnny Pope and twin sons, Jesse and Johnny of Greenville, Va. An offering was taken by Jona Dall treasurer to help financial problems under control. Same slate of officers was re-elected for another year. Following business a bountiful spread of food consisting of barbecue with a variety of other nutritious eatables and iced tea was served to approximately 126 descendants and visitors. The Rev. J. H. Bryant, pastor of Bethel Methodist church, spoke words of thanks for the food. The meeting adjourned with congregation singing Eldest Be The Tie and benediction was by Jimmy Ward.

Two Types Food Consumers
RALEIGH - Do you buy food or satisfaction? An odd question, but the United States has two kinds of consumers, Mrs. Ruby Uzzle, extension consumer marketing economist, North Carolina State University notes. Consumers in one group buy food to satisfy biological needs and nourish their families; consumers in the other buy food to satisfy psychological needs, taking the physical attributes of food for granted. Most consumers like to consider themselves practical. But what about their choosing steak instead of ground beef? Both meats offer the same nourishment, but steak has that something extra, more satisfaction. There's nothing wrong about buying satisfaction along with food, believes Mrs. Uzzle. It would be a dull world if every one shopped for the lowest cost items that provide the necessities of life. Manufacturer's spend time, energy, and money to develop packages, trademarks, and slogans to trigger subconscious motives that affect buying patterns. Certain foods may represent a status symbol to some persons, while other foods may give prestige or enhance self-esteem. The wise shopper knows she is buying satisfaction as well as food and is willing to pay the price. She knows what is in the package and buys on the basis of this knowledge, Mrs. Uzzle says.
