RALEIGH - Some laundry aids on the market serve only one purpose while others, such as fabric softeners, do several things, extension home economics specialists, at North Carolina State University, report. Fabric softeners were developed to help soften towels and napped fabrics which tend to get stiff and harsh. Softeners also cut down on the amount of static electricity in fabrics of man-made fibers. Because they Different brands of softeners vary in strength. Use the amount called for on the container; it called for on the container; it doesn't help to use more. Using a fabric softener doesn't overcome the harshness that results from poor rinsing.

You must use the softener at the right time in the wash cycle to get the best results. Add softener to the last deep rinse so that it won't mix with any detergent, bleach, bluing, water conditioner, or other laundry products, the specialists suggest,

Resource Conservation Workshop

The second annual Resource Conservation Workshop, held at North Carolina State University in Raleigh the week of June 13-17, 1968 was a tremendous success according to Mr. Calvin Mercer, Chairman of the Duplin Soil and Water Conservation Districts and the State Soil and Water Conservation Committee, was designed to acquaint high school students with conservation and natural re source development and with career opportunities in conservation fields.
Southerland reported that he received instructions in soil and water conservation, wildlife conservation and forestry.

There was plenty of time, too, for organized sports, evening movies and a banquet on the final night of the Workshop. All of the 75 boys attending thoroughly enjoyed the entire program, Each boy received a certificate for participating in the Workshop.

Mr. Mercer, District Chairman, indicates that the Workshop was such a success that it will be expanded next year.
The Duplin District was proud to have Kent Southerland repre-
