Cathy Meets Flipper

Disease may claim its victim but at least one wish has been granted. Cathy Walnwright has seen Flipper.

In true entertainer fashion Flipper put on a performance that brought forth squeals of delight from the lovely seven year old who is loosing a battle with cancer.

Cathy, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Walnwright of Penderlea, was a normal, happy and well child, at least her parents thought so, until about two months ago. Cathy complained of pain after playing. Examination showed immediate amputation of Cathy's right arm was necessary to save her life. The family was told that even then it might be too late.

Cathy wanted more than anything in all the world to see Flipper. Her father's job as an appliance salesman couldn't finance much travel after costly hospital bills.

Ray Johnson, Vice President of Cooperative Savings and Loan Association of Wallace discussed the situation with Mrs. C. J. James one night. They agreed something should be done.

The next morning in the office Cathy's problem kept pleasuring Mr. Johnson. A Progressive Farmer salesman came in and they discussed the situation. The salesman offered a percent of his sales in Wallace toward a rendezvous for Cathy and Flipper. The idea

The size cabinet one buys is determined by the size of one's family. (Allow six cubic feet for a family of two; add one cubic foot for each two additional family members and two cubic feet for guests), the types of food one buys - fresh, frozen, or canned, and the frequency with which you market.

For efficient operation, it is generally desirable to place the refrigerator in the coolest part of the kitchen, but convenient to the range, sink, and other work areas.

Temple, Social Security District Manager in Goldsboro, explained today that on July 30, 1965, President Johnson signed the 1965 Amendments to the Social Security Act. The changes in the Social Security Act established a program of health insurance for the aged and liberalized many other provisions of the law. In order to finance these changes, an increase in both the earnings base and schedule of social security taxes was made. Effective January 1, 1966, the

Taste Remains A Mystery Nutrition Foundation Reports

Animals do not taste things the same as humans do, recent scientific studies indicate.

Many people wrongly believe that animals share our tastes for food. Dr. Morley R. Kare reported recently at a meeting of the Nutrition Foundation. Dr. Kare, a specialist in the sense of taste, is professor of physiology at North Carolina State University. The Nutrition Foundation, a non-profit institution which supports scientific research and education in nutrition, will hold soon a scientific symposium on the chemistry and physiology of taste.

Dr. Kare told the trustees of the Nutrition Foundation that human taste standards must be disregarded in the search for new food sources for animals. Domestic animals eat much food which is also acceptable to humans. As man's food materials become more scarce, interest is increasing in finding alternative food sources for animals.

Man tastes things as sweet, sour, bitter or salty. In studying the sense of taste in animals, it is necessary to describe taste on the basis of behavior of animals when they are offered foods. Animals prefer some foods and find others offensive.

The studies done so far, Dr. Kare reported, clearly indicate that animals live in their own sensory world. And man, using his own senses, cannot judge what will appeal to or offend an animal.

Man has a more complicated nervous system than animals, but animals have sensory mechanisms which exceed those of man. A dog can hear sound of higher pitch than can be perceived by a man. A butterfly can perceive sugar solutions a thousand times more dilute than man can perceive — and do it with its feet. Man is not the ultimate in sensory development.

The number of taste buds varies widely; a chicken has 24, man has nine thousand, a catfish has one hundred thousand. Dr. Kare reported. But the meaning of the number of taste buds has not been ascertained. Chickens, with 24 taste buds, will reject taste-test solutions which are apparently not detectable to animals with many more taste buds.

Animals are usually thought to have some innate wisdom which guides them in proper food selection, Dr. Kare said. But studies have failed to support this contention. Some experiments suggest that wild animals are more responsive to the consequences of food selection and intake than are domestic animals, however. It is possible that domestication has altered the ability to taste, Dr. Kare suggested.

Most people form their ideas about animal tastes from feeding pets. They think that pets like "home style" or "country flavor" foods that appeal to the human palate. This form of human judgment cannot be applied to animals, Dr. Kare said.

Systematic investigations on the question of how the sense of taste operates in man and animals is just beginning. Better knowledge of taste might be applied to the benefit of the world's populations—both man and animal.

The Nutrition Foundation is supported by sixty-seven leading companies in the food and allied industries. In 25 years, the Foundation has provided some $7,000,000 for support of scientific research at universities and medical schools.
