FHA Pounding ASCS At Poverty

When the owner of a shoe repair shop in a rural southern town decided to sell out and concentrate on other business interests, his first choice for a buyer was an employee he had trained. For twenty-five hundred dollars this young man could become an owner of an established business. But where could a person with no credit established and nothing to mortgage get a $2500 loan over a long period? Farmers Home Administration provided the answer and today this town still has a shoe repair shop and this former employee is now owner. Thus far, he has been able to pay himself a weekly salary, keep needed supplies in stock and make payments to FHA. Prospects for the future are good.

Under Title III of the Economic Opportunity Act, Farmers Home Administration is quietly pounding at poverty with loans to eligible, low income families in rural areas and small towns. With offices already established throughout the country, this Federal Agency has added to its regular program a phase of the Economic Opportunity Act in order to increase the standard of living of low income families by providing, through low interest loans, an opportunity for them to increase their income.

Recently a man hobbled into an FHA office to apply for a loan. "I'm on public welfare," he said, "and I don't want to be. I know I'm crippled but I can drive a truck and during the warm months I earn a little extra money by selling fruits and vegetables from my pickup truck. I want to earn my own way and I can do it if you will loan me the money to buy a larger truck." The visit resulted in a loan and today this man hauls produce from Florida to New York during the early months and unprocessed tobacco during the fall.

The Welfare Agency who handles his case feels that his allotment will be reduced and probably eliminated. His payments to FHA are current. Low income farmers are also eligible for loans under this program. These loans are made to purchase equipment, live stock, feed, seed, to develop land and water resources, to purchase, repair, construct or relocate essential buildings. A farmer may also have a business enterprise in addition to his regular farming operation. For example, a sharecropper borrowed money to purchase a chain saw. During the winter months he saws wood for fuel, clears land and saws trees that have fallen or that people want to have removed. This borrower made an extra payment on his loan last fall and increased his own income.

FHA Supervisors will be the first to admit that some of these loans are unsuccessful. "We have one borrower who purchased a chain saw," said one supervisor. "This man knows all there is to know about the operation and care of a chain saw. We carefully planned his work, expenses, repayments and had him set up for a fair income, certainly more than he was making when he came to us. However, he just won't follow plans we made. We have worked to get him going but he just won't seem to move. We are hoping to find someone in the logging or construction business who will hire him and help him to get going. Our job is not only to make the loan but to plan with the individual and then follow through."

We want the individual to feel that this is an opportunity for him to improve through his own power and that we are only providing the financial and managerial assistance that he needs, says FHA Supervisors. They realize that it is a slow process but feel that they are gaining ground. Through re-evaluation of past loans this agency feels that future loans will be stronger and more certain of success.

As one supervisor stated "We are taking a new and different approach to poverty. It is a slow but rewarding program. Even a few hundred dollars a year increase in income to some of these families could mean the difference between adequate clothing or it could provide an essential item for their home that's what we're after - a better standard of living."

FHA loans under the Economic Opportunity Act have taken a variety of forms such as tools for carpenters, plumbers, repair shop equipment, lawn mowers, beauty parlors, restaurant grading rooms, restaurants, tractors, cabinet making, radio and TV repair, well drilling, upholstery shop, florists, and many others. These loans escape the big headlines but are writing their own story in the small towns and rural areas of the United States.

FLUE-CURED TOBACCO LOAN HOLIDAYS REDUCED

Less than 1% of the flue-cured tobacco offered for sale so far this year has gone under price-support loan.

At the half-way point in 1966 crop sales, only 3.7 million pounds, or six-tenths of 1% of the 584 million pounds of gross sales by mid-September have gone under Government loan. During the same period last year, 5% of the 1965 crop sales went under loan. Marketings have been completed in Georgia and Florida, with prices averaging 70 cents a pound compared with 66 cents in 1965. Marketings are substantially completed in South Carolina and the Border Belt of North Carolina, with prices averaging 70 cents a pound compared with 66 cents in 1965. Prices on the Eastern North Carolina markets have averaged 69 cents per pound to date, some 5 cents per pound above the average for the same period last year. Markets in the Old Belt of North Carolina and Virginia opened September 20.

Government loan holidays of flue-cured tobacco on September 1, 1966, totaled 689 million pounds less than a year ago. A total of 188 million pounds of Government loan holidays moved into trade channels during the first eight months of 1966.

A number of factors are involved in this season's unprecedented acceptance of flue-cured tobacco by trade, but basically it is a testimony to the effectiveness of the acreage-purchase program which seeks to balance supply with demand, and emphasizes quality rather than quantity.

REMINDERS

1. Return tobacco marketing cards as you complete the selling of your tobacco.
2. Apply for ACP assistance on needed conservation practices.
3. Loans are available to eligible borrowers on Farm Storage and Drying Equipment.
4. Report ACP practices to the county office as they are completed.
