All that's needed is immunization against this disease that once was taken for granted as one of the hazards of grow-

A veteran medical expert on communicable disease said this fall that measles could be era-dicated in the United States in a relatively short time if all young children were immu-nized.

Already more than 12 million American children have been immunized against measles since a vaccine was licensed in 1963, and the disease has dropped to a mere fraction of its once high incidence. Doctors have long known that measles is sometimes a much more serious disease than many parents realized. True, most children recover from measles in a short time and with no Ill effects. However, in recent years deaths attributed to measles have averaged more than 400 per year, and other non-fatal effects have caused serious health problems for many children.

Even though deaths and serious after effects are not particularly common among chil-dren who get measles, it isn't wise to take a chance. And it isn't necessary to take a chance.

The American Academy of Pediatrics, the professional so-ciety of the physicians who specialize in health problems of children, recommends that the measles vaccine be given at the age of about 12 months. If your infant is routinely under the care of a physician, the chances are he will give measles vaccine at the proper time, about measures state of measures at different types of measures available, Your doctor will select the vaccine that will be best for your child.
