RALEIGH - Gone are the days when a customer has the chance to pinch, feel and even taste a food product before she buys it, says Mrs. Ruby Uz-zel, extension consumer marketing economist, North Caro-

The best substitute today's homemaker has for the "pinch, feel and taste" of yesteryear is the information in the label of a can or package, Mrs. Uz-zele notes. That's why legis-lation regulating food products is so important.

The "Truth in Packaging" law, which goes into effect Ju-ly I, is the latest one regulat-ing food and other household

ing food and other household products. Some of the effects of this bill are already being seen one market shelves, Mrs. Uzzle

For example, some food companies are already complying with the regulation that the weight of the package contents must be printed in legible type on the force of the package. on the front of the package. On some cake mix boxes, the size of print stating weight of con-tents has been doubled.

Another provision in the law will help the shopper who likes to compare prices per unit size before she buys. According to this provision, weight must be expressed in ounces unless it is an even quart, pint or pound. This will eli-minate mathematical unraveling of wondering if "1,7 lbs." is the same as "1 3/4 lbs.", Mrs. Uzzle says.

The picture on the package is also under scrutiny in the new law. For instance, if the picture the outside of a can of mixed nuts shows many beautiful big pecans, cashews and almonds, then the consumer can't be sure she's getting a reduced price on these trems as 'cents off' is printed on the package by the manufacturer. The retailer may or may not follow through on the offer," Mrs. Uzzle explains.

It should be easier to detect quality of a food product after july 1, Mrs. Uzzle notes, The label will have to give sufficient information about ingredients so the shopper can compare the so the shopper can compare the quality of similar products. According to Mrs. Uzzle the producer of maple syrup would have to state the actual percentage of maple sugar in the bottle; rather than just stating that the product does contain that the product does contain maple sugar.

Number of servings per can or package must be spelled out more specifically, Mrs. Uzzle states. Net quantity of an average serving will have to be given either in terms of weight measure or numerical count. To be specific, instead of saying "4 servings," the lable on a can ot peaches would specify "4 two-bunds serv-"4 two-ounce serv-
