Make Your Own Bedspread

A handsome bedspread easily can be the center of interest for your bedroom. It may serve as covering or it may provide an important decorative touch. Often, it does both.

Before selecting a bedspread, study your needs. The type of room, the people using the room, and the style of furniture will help determine the kind of spread you should use.

While there is a wide variety to consider, bedspreads usually fall into one of the four following classifications:

1. Tufted - chenille, candlewick, or punch work.
2. Woven - The color and pattern are woven into the fabric.
3. Coverlets and quilts.
4. Custom tailored - made of firmly woven fabrics (antique satins, linen, chints, glosheen, denim, percale, etc.) with custom detail as quilted top, ruffles, flounces, applique, or embroidered designs.

Each kind may be purchased ready made or may be custom made. This discussion is designed specifically for the last group - the tailored or custom made type bedspread.

By making your own bedspread, you can choose the exact fabric, color, and style to harmonize with other bedroom furnishings. The fabric and the style of spread will be determined by the type of room and the way the room is used.

A boy's room usually needs strong colors, bold patterns, and sturdy fabrics. Denims, twills, corduroy, linens, and bulky weaves are good examples. These fabrics would also be appropriate for multi-purpose bedrooms. With these fabrics, you would expect to use more tailored styles.

Light weight fabrics in pastel colors and delicate designs suggests a girl's bedroom or a special guest room. Polished cottons, chintzes, ginghams, organdies, and taffetas usually lend themselves well to feminine styles.
