HOW MUCH TAXES DO CO-OPS PAY?

Tri-County Electric Membership Corporation paid more than half of its net income in 1967 in local and State taxes.

Tri-County's total of local and State taxes paid for 1967 figured out to 58 percent of the Cooperative's net electric revenues.

Tri-County paid $20,215.63 in local property taxes in seven counties, $1,602.70 in property taxes in one municipality and $43,109.00 in gross receipt and other taxes to the State of North Carolina.

Tax payments were made by Tri-County EMC to county governments as follows: Duplin County, $8,063.80; Lenoir County, $3,743.66; Wayne County, $8,005.32; Jones County, $68.87; Wilson County, $56.10; Johnston County, $263.90; Sampson County, $13.98.

In addition, Tri-County made tax payments to Goldsboro in the amount of $1,602.70, Goldsboro being the location of the headquarters facilities.

North Carolina's electric membership corporations are truly taxpaying, locally-owned, locally-managed electric systems that taxpayers run for themselves.

They pay taxes on the same basis as the private power companies, even though their ability to pay is less than that of the power companies.

They have revenues of only $500 per mile of line compared with $6,000 per mile for the power companies.

Had the co-ops operated on a profit-making basis as the power companies do, they would also have collected from their consumers an amount to pay income taxes. As non-profit electric systems, they left this money in the hands of their consumers. BUT TAXES are only one of the contributions the electric cooperatives are making to their communities and state. In addition to paying taxes, they are promoting and furthering the development of rural areas and rural communities, thus both adding to North Carolina's income and increasing the property values on which taxes are based.

There are 32 electric cooperatives in North Carolina, all working for people, all paying taxes and all helping to build a better North Carolina for all the taxpayers.
