

Local Telephone Expansion

Improvement and expansion of the Kenansville telephone exchange is now underway. Street Richardson, local manager for Carolina Telephone, said today that a $24,000 program is in progress to expand the company's central office equipment here.

Included in the project will be installation of equipment to provide facilities to serve 278 new telephones for subscribers in this area and permit better grades of service to present subscribers. Richardson said that the growth of Kenansville in recent years has brought about an increased demand for telephone service. This demand has taxed the capacity of present equipment.

Telephones in this area have increased from 330 to more than 770 in the past ten years.

First 700 - Bushel Yam Grower Sought

North Carolina's 700 Bushel Sweet Potato Club is looking for its first member.

Henry Covington, extension sweet potato specialist at North Carolina State University, pointed out the absence of a single club member in the new club in announcing the 1968 state production contest.

To qualify for the 700 Bushel Club, a grower must produce 700 bushels of marketable yield on an acre. The yield must be certified by the county extension agent or someone designated by him.

Wayfarers Well Received

The Tar Heel Fine Arts Society opened their 1968 season by presenting an outstanding concert Thursday night October 3.

The Kenansville Elementary School Auditorium was filled to near capacity for the presentation of "The Wayfarers."

These young men blended the past, present, and future, the comic and tragic, the specific and the universal into a wholly new vision of what folk music is and can be.

Patrons described it as "real fine entertainment," and some called it "outstanding." All were well pleased.

The Fine Arts Society will continue to bring outstanding entertainment to the people of Duplin County. Watch this paper for next show.

JSI Conference

Superintendents or representatives from fourteen county and city public school systems recently met at James Sprunt Institute to discuss the new requirements that were recently adopted by the State Board of Education concerning approved program approaches to preservice and inservice education for public school teachers.

James Sprunt Institute was selected as one of eight regional conference sites in which to conduct this conference. Those present represented the school systems in the counties of Brunswick, Carteret, Craven, Jones, New Hanover, Onslow, Pamlico, Pender, Sampson, and Wayne. City systems represented were New Bern, Clinton, Kinston, and Goldsboro.

Dr. J.P. Freeman of the Division of Professional Services within the State Department of Public Instruction in Raleigh presided at the conference and emphasized the opportunity that the Community College System offers the local superintendent and the public school systems in training teachers and offering certificate renewal programs.

Corn - Hog Opportunity Cited - But Profits Not Automatic

Marketing the abundant supplies of low priced corn through livestock is one alternative open to North Carolina farmers who are looking for ways to offset some of the effects of a weak grain market.

However, farmers shouldn't be misled into thinking that feeding $1-per-bushel corn to hogs, for example, will automatically assure a profitable operation.

Extension livestock specialists and farm management economists at North Carolina State University have pointed out that the current grain marketing situation presents both opportunities and pitfalls for the man feeding the relatively cheap grain to hogs.

"The price he pays for feeder pigs and the price he will receive for the finished hog are two of the factors that must be considered, along with the price of corn," suggests Dr. J.R. Jones, swine specialist, and economist Clyde Weathers.

They indicate in a cost and returns analysis that a farmer who pays $18 for feeder pigs, feeds them $1-per-bushel corn and sells them on a $16-per-hundredweight top-hog market probably will lose money.

The $18 feeder pig price is not an unreasonable figure to use in such a comparison at the present time. Feeder pig prices have been driven up recently and in some cases, determined by grade and weight, exceed the $18-per-head figure.

On the other hand, the top-hog market currently is considerably higher than the $16 level, more nearly at $19 and above. If he can market his finished hogs at this price,

Jones and Weathers figure, a farmer can afford to pay up to nearly $20 for feeder pigs and realize a small net return to land, labor and management. This is figured on corn at $1 per bushel.

However, should the top-hog market drop below $18 per hundredweight, chances for the farmer to realize a profit would be very small, based on current feeder pig prices.

There isn't any indication that top hog prices will decline sharply in the next several months, according to A.V. Allen, specialist in charge of extension animal husbandry at N.C. State. "We hope nothing unexpected happens that would cause major decline," he added.

A seasonal decline of moderate proportions wouldn't be totally unexpected.

Here are some suggestions Jones and Weathers offer to assist the farmer in making a decision concerning feeding hogs:

--If permanent feeding facilities are available, the farmer should use them as long as he is realizing a rate of return from the hogs high enough to give him at least a small margin above variable costs -- costs of feeder pigs, feed, etc. He will be paying for the fixed costs of the facilities whether he uses them or not.

--If top-hog market stays strong, sell on the heavy side of the top-hog weight range. If the market weakens to at or near the $17 per hundredweight level, sell on the light side of the 180 to 240 top-hog weight range.

desire to enter so yields may be certified on the day of harvest.

All growers are eligible. Production can be measured from any one acre on the farm or from the average yield per acre from the entire field.

"Growers should keep in mind that dry weather has reduced yields this year and may result in a lower range of yields in the contest," said Covington. "If a grower thinks he has a pretty good yield, we would encourage him to enter."
