Miss Farrior, Presbyterian Minister, Instructor At Peace College

RALEIGH. One of eight ordained women ministers in the Presbyterian Church joined the faculty at Peace College here this fall. Miss Louise H. Farrior, fourth woman in her denomination to become a minister, is teaching Bible on the junior college campus. Miss Farrior, a native of Warsaw, was ordained in July of 1967 after she was graduated from Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary. As a minister she may administer church sacraments, baptism and the Lord's supper... and may perform marriage ceremonies. Until the early 1960s the ordained ministry of the church was still another area restricted...for men only.

Recalling her fellow female ministers by name, the soft-spoken teacher pointed to their varied careers...a chaplain, a professor in a theological seminary, several associate ministers and, like herself, college teachers. She is just beginning her college teaching career. "It's a culmination of what I've worked for," she said.

"But I'm really the most freshman of all freshmen in my knowledge of the college-age level. My work has been almost entirely with adults." She has worked with the Board of Christian Education in Richmond and with Women of the Church in Atlanta.

"Now I have an entree into the lives of these young people and it can turn out to be the hardest thing I've ever done," confessed Miss Farrior. "The college campus is a part of the whole spectrum of our society...but with a concentration of the young...who have ideas that are growing. The college campus can be a volatile situation but not necessarily so.

"Here people live and grow and express themselves and are a part of total society," she continued, "not an isolated group. They go home. They are a part of all society. I think college is where they can learn to be part of a responsible society." If Miss Farrior has a secret password into the lives of her Peace students it is to treat them as adults...with respect and love and caring.

"They are the same as adults in the long run," Miss Farrior said. "Not any of us are really mature. We are all on the way to being. Are doesn't matter."

The new instructor is an advocate of direct personal relationships with students to establish some kind of rapport. Out of class she works with the girls through the Peace Student Christian Association (PSCA). Mackie Butler of Rowland is president.

"PSCA provides an opportunity for students to have a community service outreach," Miss Farrior stressed. "It

Miss Farrior is a graduate of East Carolina University, before coming to the Peace College School of Christian Education where she received her M.A. in English Bible; she taught first grade in Jacksonville and Fayetteville for 10 years. She was released from Louisville Seminary one of the top four students in 1967 with her M.D. and later received her masters in theology from Dalem Theological Seminary in Richmond.

Three of Miss Farrior's courses are in religious-related fields. One was a missionary to China. Others are working as a medical missionary in the Congo and as a director of Christian education at the First Presbyterian Church in Charlotte.

Miss Farrior's parents are deceased. Two of her aunts still reside in Warsaw. They are Mrs. E. J. Hill and Mrs. J. W. Farrior, who was a student at Peace and whose daughter...

Miss Farrior followed at the Southern Seminary as a Peace student.

Miss Farrior's class in Peace was also limited to her own and women. In a high school program, Miss Farrior was introduced to a Peace representative but decided to attend East Carolina.

"Peace has been a family word," she concluded.

Large contributions to the building of the school and chapel resulted in 1967. The school in 1967 had a total of more than half of the total for all students' religious training during the year. The building today, which includes chapel and dining hall, was responsible for nearly all of the previous school production.
