

Emergency Use
Of Phone

Ann: "What's your brother's name?"
 Sally: "What's his name?"
 Ann: "Call the fire department, please, and hurry!"
 Sally: "What's the number?"
 Ann: "I don't know, look it up!"

Sally: (Every second and every third and after looking for two or three minutes says) "I can't find the number, Ann, come help me!"

Ann: (Ann steps beating at the fire with her sweater and comes to help.) "I know how to find the number easily. It's written inside the front cover of the phone book. Oh no! It's not here! You forgot to write it in. I'll have to look it up. (The two girls are so excited that it takes two or three more minutes to look up the number.)

Fire Chief: (The fire trucks arrive a few minutes later.) "I'm sorry, Sally! We probably could have saved the house if you had called us a few minutes earlier. Why did you wait so long to call?"

Did you ever stop and really think about what you should do in an emergency. What would you do? Who would you call?

Of course the first thing to do is to remain as calm as possible. In order to remain calm, you must know what to do and who to call. If you will look on the inside cover of your telephone directory you will find a place to list nearly every emergency number you might need. Fire, police, State patrol, sheriff, doctor, ambulance, hospital. This section also states "If number is not knowndial 'operator' (0) for assistance in reaching the emergency service you need."

Most people never fill out this very important section of their directory. Often precious minutes are lost in trying to reach an emergency service when the number is not known. If people would only take a few minutes to write down these few numbers it could prevent a tragedy.

The cover also directs people to the operator for assistance when they don't know the number and don't have it written down. According to Richardson, the problem with this is that many people don't know who they want and what agency the operator should call. "Many county rural fire departments, for instance, have five or six different departments and each department may have four or five numbers. The operator may not know which department should handle his call and again much time is wasted. A few seconds can be very important in an emergency situation."

Carolina telephone would like to offer the following emergency tips, Richardson said: 1) Be prepared—Have a fire extinguisher and first aid kit. 2) Know who your fire and enforcement agencies are. 3) Have emergency numbers written in directory or some other handy place. 4) Don't waste time; call immediately; it's better to call and help not be needed, than not to have help if it's needed. 5) Talk slowly and clearly. 6) Give important details, who you are, what kind of emergency, where help is needed. How to get there if necessary. 7) Above all remain calm.
