Vitamins E And C May Slow Aging

The chemical reaction of vitamins E and C in the body may be a dull subject for some, but Prevention Magazine explains how the two vitamins together apparently slow the aging process. Thus the subject takes on a little more significance.

Here's what takes place: Vitamin E is an antioxidant that prevents compounds called free radicals from forming in the body. Through such action vitamin E preserves the pure and chemically unbound oxygen so that its use in nourishing tissues is maximized. Vitamin C acts similarly, first by actually boosting the activity of vitamin E, and second, by acting parallel to it. Vitamin C actually seems to increase the effectiveness of vitamin E.
