Dry Spell Underscores Importance of Moisture

Rainfall has been extremely deficient in the Raleigh area since the middle of August. In fact, we have not had a good soaking rain since that time. This has interfered with the seeding of fall evergreen lawns and the planting of bulbs. If we do not get relief soon, Raleigh will be buying water from Durham and Butler.

Three weeks ago I overseeded my lawn, and that of one of my sons, with fescue and Italian rye grass. We used 25 lbs. of seed and 150 lbs. of 8-8-8 fertilizer and hoped for rain. None has fallen, so the seeds are right where they landed and the fertilizer pellets still solid and waiting. This brings into sharp focus the importance of water for all growing things and how dependent we are on an adequate supply.

As soon as the soil is in condition, now is a good time to plant all of the evergreen shrubs and trees -- hollies, rhododendrons, hemlocks, etc. Don't be stingy when you dig the holes. Separate top and sub-soil and place the top soil around the roots mixed with an equal volume of peat moss; or well decomposed compost.

Remember not to plant azaleas and camellias too deep. They are shallow rooted plants and will not tolerate too much over-burden of soil. If balled and burlapped, place the top of the ball even with the soil level. The same is true for container-grown plants. Use equal volumes of peat moss and good soil for filling the hole, Mulch.

If rainfall is deficient, water all newly set trees and shrubs after planting. A thorough soaking about once a week should be sufficient. Over-watering will result in a water-logged soil and cause trouble.

Garden sanitation is a good practice for each month of the plant growing year. This is especially true in the fall when so many plants have matured. Get rid of them so that they will not serve as hibernating nests for insects and carry-over for diseases.

Another good practice. Have your vegetable garden soil tested, add the lime and phosphoric needed.
