TOBACCO GROWERS TALK ABOUT VIKING SHIP CALCIUM NITRATE

"In three years of growing under stress conditions, Calcium Nitrate has made the difference between crop failure and a successful year."

Ennis and Jerry Byrd Orum, North Carolina

The Byrd family farms 40 acres of tobacco and 260 acres of corn and beans. They started with Calcium Nitrate in 1976 and have stayed with it ever since. Mr. Byrd tells why: "We liked Calcium Nitrate's fast action right from the start. You could see the crop feeding right away, and could also tell that Calcium Nitrate does its job and then is through. It won't hold tobacco green in the field over an extended period of time which was a problem with our former fertilizer. The last three years we've used Calcium Nitrate in liquid solution when the crop was too big to cultivate; it really works out well. I figure that during 3 years of growing under bad, stress conditions, Calcium Nitrate increased my profit 50 percent!"
