The CPA... key man in today's business environment.

The letters CPA beside an individual's name stand for Certified Public Accountant. It is no honorary title.

Those who receive it, do so only after years of study and experience, and only after successfully completing a rigorous three-day examination on all aspects of the field.

A CPA is a dedicated professional whose activities daily influence the financial judgments of small business, individuals, major corporations, and governments.

He is a key man in assessing many critical business factors and often provides a fresh analysis.

The CPA performs audits of financial statements, provides compilation and review services as well as client write-up and bookkeeping, advises on tax matters and prepares the returns, is available for estate tax consultation and offers management advisory services.

His knowledge of today's complicated tax structure is often responsible for significant income, gift and estate tax savings. He frequently provides invaluable assistance to attorneys, bankers and other professionals on accounting and tax problems.
