Selecting Wood For Fences And Decks

Duplin homeowners who are thinking about building a fence or deck are urged to think twice about the type of wood they select.

"Choose the right wood and use it properly, and you can enjoy your deck for 25 years or more. Make the wrong choice and you will be repairing or replacing it in a year or two," said Mae H. Spicer, home economics extension agent.

Mrs. Spicer said the AES

staff has information on selecting wood for decks, fence posts, piers and other outdoor use. "We will be happy to provide this information for anyone who can use it. Simply give us a call at 296-1996 or come by our office in Kenansville," she said.

Basically, homeowners have three choices when selecting wood for outdoor use, Mrs. Spicer said. They can use pressure-treated southern pine, the heartwood of naturally decay-resistant trees, or untreated wood. Of these alternatives, southern pine is the best choice for most homeowners. It costs about half as much as decay-resistant, clear, redwood heartwood, and will outlast much longer. Some other naturally decay-resistant species are black locust, cedar and cypress.
