

Tobacco Course Held

Wade Ward, center, of Duplin County, is one of 47 young tobacco farmers who attended a tobacco short course conducted by the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service with the assistance of a grant-in-aid from Philip Morris, USA. O. Witcher Dudley III, vice president of PM, and Dr. Chester Black, associate dean and director of the N.C. AES (right) presented certificates to those who completed the four-day course. The group made an all-day bus trip to Richmond, Va. to visit the Philip Morris leaf processing, manufacturing and research facilities. All other sessions were held at the McKimmon Center on the NCSU campus in Raleigh. The certificate is signed by Black of NCAES and J. Michael Moore, Duplin County tobacco extension agent.

Scoliosis Screening Program

The North Carolina Crippled Children's Program in conjunction with school and health authorities in Kenansville have announced plans for a screening program designed to find back abnormalities among school children in the sixth grade.

Dr. Alice S. Scott, assistant superintendent, says the simple examination procedure will be handled by professionals and require about 60 seconds.

The health and school officials are urging local parents to grant permission for the simple tests. School children will bring home special forms for parents to sign, giving their approval.

The objective of the program is to detect spinal irregularities which can more easily be corrected in young children. Too often, the officials say, back curvatures are not discovered until so late that permanent damage has been done and drastic treatment is required.

Signs of scoliosis, the medical term for spinal curvature, are found in approximately five to ten percent of young people examined. Continued follow-up or treatment is needed in only about two percent of the cases.

Spinal deformities often develop during the years of early adolescence when the young person grows very rapidly, Dr. Scott noted.

Mrs. Helen Ballard, director of nurses for the county health department, says that treatment, when necessary, usually consists of a back brace which helps to correct the condition and keeps it from progressing. A brace does not interfere with most activities, including non-contact sports.

Dr. Scott indicates that parents of students found to have signs of scoliosis will be notified and urged to take their child to a physician for further evaluation.

The examination itself requires only that the child bend forward and bend to the sides. The examining personnel observe the spine and note any possible curvature of the spine such as upper spine curve, lower spine curve, rib hump, uneven shoulders and uneven hip.
