Red Cross Hurricane Diana Fact Sheet

As of September 17, the following figures were compiled by the Red Cross. There were three deaths. In single family homes, 15 were destroyed with 404 having major damage and 3,802 having minor damage. Twenty-six mobile homes were destroyed, with 64 others receiving major damage and 376 minor damage. Seventeen apartments were destroyed, 63 received major damage and 916 minor damage. The total number of families suffering loss was 5,683. At this time, Sept. 17, it is estimated that Red Cross will spend $806,000 to assist the Hurricane Diana victims. Three Red Cross service centers opened in Wilmington, Southport and Carolina Beach. A disaster fund campaign goal of $500,000 has been set. Anyone in Duplin County wishing to donate to this fund is asked to send it to the Chapter Headquarters, c/o Mrs. N.B. Boney, secretary, P.O. Box 56, Kenansville, NC 28349.

Electronics Engineer Joins JSTC Faculty

Robert Nelms, electronics engineer, will be the newest faculty member in James Sprunt Technical College's electronic engineering technician curriculum when the fall quarter begins Sept. 27. Nelms bring an impressive background of electronics training and experience to his position at James Sprunt. After a 20-year Air Force career, during which he worked primarily in the electronics field, he was employed with California industries for 12 years as an electronics engineer. He holds a B.S. in electronic engineering from the University of Illinois and has done additional graduate work in electronics.

In 1974, Nelms took his experience to the classroom at Trident Technical College in Charleston, SC. He has taught electronics at the community college level since that time in both the South Carolina and North Carolina systems. Nelms says he is excited about teaching at JSTC. "I am hoping that the combination of my teaching experience from several places and the time I have spent in industry will enable me to provide a practical as well as theoretical perspective to my teaching in the program." James Sprunt's electronic engineering program is one of two high tech curriculums at the college. Business computer programming is the second. The two-year program prepares its graduates for careers in electronics research and design, development, production, maintenance or sales. As the use of computers in business and industry continues to rise, persons with electronics backgrounds and expertise are in great demand. "Most recent statistics show that electronic technicians who can perform computer maintenance are now in even greater demand than computer programmers," says Perry Whaley, also an instructor in the program. The electronics program is relatively new at JSTC, having operated for three years. Nelms views it as "small but going. I am impressed by the enthusiasm and dedication of everyone I've met here so far and am looking forward for the fall quarter to begin." Registration for the electronics program and all other JSTC programs is Sept. 26.

Registration for the electronics program and all other JSTC programs is Sept. 26.
