THANK YOU

Friends are the greatest treasure in times of trial. A simple thanks cannot express the love we have for the many people who helped us re-establish after the loss of our home to fire. Yet, a thank you and our deep appreciation is the only way we know to return a portion of the love given to us since the fire January 21.

Thank you,
Belton and Mattie Lee Minchew

Draft Dodger

Winter winds are starting to blow, and some of that cold air could come whistling in under the doors of your house.

If you are handy, you can use your sewing machine, the scrap basket and the children's sandbox to put together an effective and attractive barrier against these cold drafts. You could make a sand-filled tube called a draft dodger.

Here's how: first cut a lining from a sturdy leak-proof fabric. An old rubberized raincoat, oil cloth or a vinyl tablecloth will do. Cut this lining eight inches wide and as long as the width of your door and frame, plus two inches.

For the outer covering of the draft dodger, select a fabric that complements the room's color scheme. Cut this piece nine inches wide and the sale length as the lining.

Use a 5/8-inch seam allowance as you sew the lining fabric to form a tube. Leave one end open. Turn the tube right side out and fill it with dry, sifted sand. Pack in enough sand so that the tube is firm yet flexible. Stitch the end shut.

Then sew the outer fabric to make a second tube. Turn it right side out. Work the sand-filled lining into the outer tube, adjust to fit, and sew the end shut.

Now the draft dodger is ready for duty to prevent cold drafts from coming in under the doors of your home.

The long sleeves ended in lace points over the wrists. Lace and seed pearls trimmed the full skirt and cathedral-length train. Her mantilla was of matching lace and she carried a silk cascading bouquet of white miniature carnations, apple blossoms, daisies, pink sweetheart roses and coral almond blossoms tied with pink and white satin streamers.

Miss Mitzi Wells, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Janet Himmelfarb, sister of the groom, and Dina Lanphier.

Following the ceremony, the bride's parents entertained at a reception in Memorial Hall in the church. Assisting with the serving were Mrs. Connie Flory, aunt of the bride, and Mrs. JoAnn Barrow, Mrs. Karen Wells and Miss Karen Brock, cousins of the bride.
