

Winery Planned

Duplin Wine Cellars has formed a new corporation to build a tourist winery on Interstate 95 in Johnston County.

Called Southland Estate Winery, the attraction will be on 23.4 acres on the interstate overlooking an eight-acre lake about a mile south of Selma. The winery will feature tours of the vineyards, a plantation house with wooden tanks, a hospitality and tasting area, and a cellar.

According to a company announcement, Southland will be separate from Duplin Wine Cellars and is incorporated as Carolina Winery Inc. Its charter allows the sale of 20,000 shares of common stock, initially priced at $50 per share. About 12,000 shares have been pledged.

Duplin executives have been working on the plan since July 1983, visiting tourist-related wineries in New York and California.

The winery will not compete with those in New York, California or Europe, the Duplin directors said, but will feature wines made from the native North Carolina muscadine grapes.

Jeffery Charles Randall of Larchmont, N.Y., has been appointed winemaker. He has a master's degree in food science from North Carolina State University.

David Fussell, president of Duplin Wine Cellars, will be chief administrative officer.

Tests Score Below Average

The average scores of most grades in the Pender and Duplin county schools were below state averages in the California Achievement Tests this year.

Pender County students averaged below the state level at all five grades tested. In Duplin County, only the average sixth-grade score equaled the state level.

The state requires that the tests be given to first-, second-, third-, sixth- and ninth-graders. School systems can give the tests to other grades as well. The tests were given in March as part of the state's annual testing program.

Second-, third-, sixth- and ninth-graders in New Hanover County scored above the state average. First-graders' scores were equal to the state average.

Second-, sixth- and ninth graders in Whiteville City school and first- and second-graders in Bladen County also scored above the average. Duplin County sixth-graders scored equal to the state average. The remaining grades in those school systems and all five grades in Pender and Brunswick counties scored below the state average.

Comparing this year's scores to the school systems' scores last year:

• Duplin County: Scores improved for the first, third and ninth grades, remained the same for the second and were lower for the sixth.

• Pender County: Scores improved for second and ninth grades, stayed the same for sixth grade and were lower for the first and third grades.

Education officials say the tests indicate each student's progress. The averages listed for entire grades and school systems compare, an "average" student in each district with national testing statistics.

Grade level results provide important information, but the real value of the tests is in tracking the progress of individual students from year to year, said Haywood Davis, superintendent of Pender County schools. "It paints a picture," he said, of individual progress or decline.

The scores are given in two parts. The first number is the grade equivalent and the second number is the percentile. The test scores are measured against a standard established by the test publishers, called a "norm," which is the average for each grade taking the test in the seventh month of the school year.

The percentile is based on the raw score, which is the total number of correct answers given, said Carlton Prince, assistant superintendent for Whiteville City Schools. If a child scores in the 67th percentile, it means he did better than 67 percent of the children who took the test.

The grade equivalent is less specific. It gives the approximate grade equivalent of a student, based on his percentile ranking on these tests, compared to the "average" student taking the test, Davis said.
