Enjoying Your Age
Feeling good about yourself isn't something that comes about in later years. Instead it takes a sense of self-worth and self-respect to make you enjoy your age, whether you're 20, 40, 60 or 90.

What's more, enjoying your age requires staying in the mainstream of life through continuous learning. It means taking delight in work and play and participating with and showing concern for others.

Concern for others can take many forms. If you've had a successful career, share your knowledge and perspective with others. If you've always contributed to the community, continue to do so.

If you have a physical limitation, show concern for others by sharing your emotional and intellectual sides. And listening, really listening, is an important way of showing concern.

Coping with problems as they arise, making decisions, asking for help and accepting assistance when it is most needed — all these things can help you feel good about yourself.

Being continuously independent requires skills, but so does learning to be interdependent. Being interdependent calls for acceptance without being demanding. And it calls for accepting assistance with a spirit that becomes interaction.

It adds up to this. If you continue to grow, to change, to adapt, you can enjoy your age, whatever it is.

Crafts and confections were brought by members and Mary Anna Grady entertained as she auctioned off the donated items. The proceeds from the auction will go to the scholarship fund. Janice Grady presided in the absence of Rachel Hatch, president.
