A GREAT SUCCESS.

King's Business College is Going Forward with Rapid Strides.

An institution of which the people of Raleigh may well be proud is King's Business College, which has admirably appointed apartments in the Pullen Building on Fayetteville street.

The school is indeed a credit to North Carolina and to Raleigh. There is also a branch at Charlotte. Prof. J. H. King, the president and head of the school, has built up a flourishing college, and is backed and endorsed by all the leading business men of the city, who feel a deep interest in this institution.

The college is thoroughly equipped with all modern improvements, making it in every respect a first-class commercial college. There is a competent corps of instructors, and the instruction is thorough. The college has established such a reputation that there is constant demand for its graduates.

It is a fact especially creditable to Professor King and his associates that before he established his college several parties attempted to run business colleges here, but failed.

To be a success in business a technical education is now almost essential. The old style is no longer popular. Competent book keepers and stenographers are always in demand, and, while experience is valuable, it should follow the business college training, which has been reduced to a science.

Since January first King's Business College has enrolled an unusually large number of students, which speaks volumes when we consider the low price of cotton. The best recommendation any institution or anything else can have is that it flourishes in dull as well as prosperous seasons.

In Surry County recently a young man named Dock Sutphin was kicked in the stomach by a horse and injured so that he died a few days latter.

The fourth annual poultry show is being held here in rear of the Agricultural building. It is a greater success than ever before.
