Great Name Survives.
Of all the possessions of this life fame is the noblest; when the body has sunk into the dust the great name still lives.—Schiller.

Tempered Cleanliness.
In the Lois de la Galanterie, written for beaux and dandies in 1640, it is urged that "Every day one should take pains to wash one's hands, and one should also wash one's face almost as often." Perhaps as often as twice a week?—Youth's Companion.

Visions of Great Minds.
Every great mind seeks to labor for eternity. All men are captivated by immediate advantages; great minds alone are excited by the prospect of distant good.—Schiller.
