To Polk County Cotton Growers

A new disease of cotton (cotton blight) has appeared in many counties of the state. Mr. Fredrick A. Wolfe, State Plant Pathologist describes leaves or branches, dark brown sunken spots may be found at the base of the affected leaves and spots appear as brown streaks along the main stems. The leaves are so weakened that they shed or drop off, as well as the stems or branches. In severe cases the plant may become destitute of leaves and consequently die.

This disease has never been epidemic in N. C. It appeared in epidemic form in Arkansas in 1920, which was a very wet season there. Cloudy wet weather appears to be the cause of infection. Sunshine effectually stops this trouble. If any cotton grower discovers such trouble, please let me know.

Respectfully, J. R. SAMS,

Hooch Hound's Flirt With Undertaker Says Noted Chicago Medico

Distilled Poison Populates
Nut Factories and Penitentiaries According to Famous Alienist

A Texas peace officer when requested to arrest a hooch crazed cowpuncher said "No suh! I'll leave Jim alone until he gets sober. When I commit suicide, I does it natural!"

And the hooch-hound loaded to the gunnels with the brand of liquid dynamite dispensed by moonshine peddlers is a potential killer. Bang! goes his little gun, and somebody turns up his toes or maybe he just slams his benzine buggy along the highway taking the turns on high until he bumps into a victim.

In any case liquor is to blame. It was bad enough when the whiskey addict got simon pure corn juice but NOW—well listen to what Dr. Francis J. Gentry of Chicago has to say about the "bottled in bond" brands dispensed by thrist alleviators of the present period.

There is no competition among bootleggers, and any compound which may pass for whiskey or gin finds a steady sale. The profits from this illegitimate industry are enormous, and these persons have not the spur of commercial honesty to stimulate their scrupulosity. As a result, a mash of corn meal which has been inaccurately fermented in some dirty cellar is distilled entire, and the resultant product contains large quantities of aldehyds and fusel oil. A few drops of the essence of juniper added to alcohol of doubtful purity and shaken up with some water produces gin. A little caramel, some moonshine whiskey. The effects of the drinking of such compounds are reflected in the increased admissions to insane asylums, and in the ever increasing number of automobile accidents, murders and other crimes.

Practically all of the home-brewed products contain acetic acid, aldehyds, fusel oil, and various decomposition products. A high percentage of the labeled goods which are alleged to have been imported into the United States are spurious imitations. Safety lies entirely in leaving strictly alone any alcoholic beverages in the United States, no matter by whom prepared or by whom offered.
