show very clearly the vast economic exclusive markets, frequent spraying losses sustained by agricultural sections during the severe post-war deflation period. In 1919, the total exchange value of farm products, exclusive of crops fed to livestock, was $8,165,000, 000. In 1921 this exchange value was only $6,221,000-000, representing a depreciation of nearly one-quarter in real value or in the aggregate buying ability of the nation's farmers. What effect this had upon economic conditions ference between what they pay and war efforts to replenish the lack of of the country as a whole can thus
