This little mountain city, the natural gateway from the Palmetto Stale, to Western North Carolina, nestles in an elevated cove in the Blue Rirge Range and less than one mile from the geographical line s parting North and South Caro hua, whose people have the same ising the same hospitality, and the same high purposes.

Back in the formative and historically important period of our country, in which Charl stonians played the pre-eminent role, and many decades before the Southern Railway beg.n serving the South, South Ca rojinians wire wont to travel every summer to Tryon in "coach and four", accompanied by a retinue of servants, the leisurely made trip consuming days of time. The reasons for hese annual pilgrimages has been handed down from genera tion, and e ch succeeding year the descendants of those gentlefork, in annually mer sing numbers, six makig the same journey in a few hours, and for the same specific rea ons. For them it means cape from the simmer heat of the lowiands, and a change from the monotonous persped ive of the coastal pains to a daily panorama of infinitely varied scenic wonder-Experience has taught them that the wearled of either sex, bending under a weight of responsibility. or worn with prosaic duties that seemingly never end, can here throw of fennui of spirit and renew strength of body and mind can here rest revivity and absorb, without effort, the giory of the moun tains, the peaceful calm of the valleys, and that here is a section of nature reserved to man where he can truly find "sermons in stones, books in running brooks, and God in everything."
