

ROSE HILL NEWS

Mrs. W. B. Herring, chairman of the two circles of the Presbyterian missionary society, entertained the circles on Wednesday afternoon, in the home of Mrs. Herring. This was the first meeting of the church year, and the attendance was very good. Mrs. D. B. Herring led the Bible study, and Mrs. W. H. Hall gave a vocal solo. At the close of the program the hostesses served a delightful salad plate.

The Katie Murray circle of the Baptist missionary society met in the home of Mrs. Preston Fussell on Wednesday afternoon, with Mrs. Laura Boney serving as hostess. The program topic was "The Banner of the Cross", and the leader was Mrs. E. G. Murray. Assisting in presenting the program were Mrs. Laura Boney, Mrs. Preston Fussell, Misses Jimmer Alderman and Ruth Murray. Delicious refreshments were served by the hostesses during the social period.

Miss Yvonne Alderman left on Wednesday for Greensboro, where she entered the high school music contest in piano playing and attend other features of the State Music Festival this week. Miss Alderman recently won highest honors at Fayetteville for the Eastern district in high school piano playing. She is a student of the local high school and a piano pupil of K. E. Hurst.

A sunrise Easter service was observed on last Sunday at the local Methodist church. The pastor, Rev. P. O. Lee, was in charge. Communion services were held.

Special music, sponsored by the local music club and given by a union choir, was much enjoyed last Sunday morning at the Methodist church.

SHIPMAN REPORTS WORK LEGISLATURE PAST WEEK

On chain filling stations, reduced income tax exemptions or gifts to ten per cent, and by that time had gotten the bill down to a reasonable basis for trading with the House. There the matter stood at the week-end.

While it was reported in the papers that a compromise blew up in the Senate, there was in fact no compromise in sight except on the basis of the House revenue bill. The Senate had nothing to offer in its bill. So practically all the Senate leaders were agreed that in the shape that they had the revenue bill, it would make the Senate look foolish, so they put the act back on its first reading. It will be passed this week, the House will refuse to concur and the measure then goes to conference. Conferees will have to stay within the limits fixed by the two houses. When they get through they will have about what they started with, and the three months that have been taken up with the bill have been merely devoted to acquainting the members of the Legislature with the bill prepared by the budget commission. That will be the sum-total of all the discussion. That will have been worth while.

Veterans of the Legislature have come to the conclusion at all this business of having sixty days of hearings on the revenue bill is a waste of time, at what ought to be done is have brief hearings, let those with a grievance present it, and then report the budget bill to both houses, and let them start discussing it. The budget commission holds hearings before it drafts its bill, and has practically all the information at a legislative committee can get. While this is an argument that opposes the democratic principle of government, it is a fact that after three months of debate, the Legislature usually gets back to where it started with the budget commission bill.

The Hill liquor bill is still being kicked around in the Senate, but it is no longer a live issue of discussion. Senator Sprunt Hill is a great fighter, and he continues to pump new life into his bill. The latest primer is an amendment set up eighteen liquor licenses as a starter in towns and cities agreeable to having them, thus helping to balance the budget right off the bat. But Democrats shy away from this program, with a sales tax already certain, as they think it would make too good a campaign issue for the Republicans to levy a tax on "poverty, need and misery." They think that enough taxes on the consumer has already been made certain to spread it further by legalizing liquor and getting still more money from those least able to afford it. The Hill liquor bill isn't dead yet, but it is sleeping, and bids fair to continue to do so.

The Legislature ran true to legislative form in refusing to reapportion the members of the General Assembly in accordance with the census of 1930. Counties in the East that stood to lose a member opposed its passage and killed it. Representative Day showed that the East would be almost as well represented under the new set-up as it is now, but the legislators feared to meddle with the present set-up. They figured that a bird in the hand is worth a good deal more than two in the bush. They know that they didn't know a new set-up might bring.

The thing that has puzzled the folks at home more than anything else is how the Legislature can march up the hill one day and then march down the hill again the next day. For instance, the House passed a resolution asking Congress to repeal the cotton processing tax, and now it has a bill before it to repeal the resolution. The House had been a hot fire from the newspapers, which pointed out that North Carolina had agricultural prosperity for the first time in a long time last year, and that without the processing tax, which corresponds to a tariff for the benefit of the farmer. The legislators had been induced to pass the resolution by lobbyists for the textile manufacturers, who put up plausible arguments and the legislators like to be enlightening. But how to be obliging all around without offending anybody is just one of the most difficult things that any legislator ever tackled.

Here it is Easter, and the Legislature not even thinking about going home. But about two more weeks ought to tell the story. The House is getting the revenue machinery bill through for the Senate, and the Senate appropriations committee is ready to report out the bill which already has passed the House. Committees are about through meeting. Only the revenue bill stands in the way now. It ought to be gotten out of the way by the end of the first week in May.

One of the most interesting features of the present session of the Legislature is that one scarcely ever hears of a Republican as such. Representative Charles Jonas votes with the Democrats about as often as he does with the Republicans, and he can always be counted on to stand by the University, which causes some of his Republican supporters to see red because they think it is a sign of weakness. Representative Loomis Klutz, of Catawba, sits up nights looking up the birthdays of great Democrats like Jefferson and gets the House to adjourn in their honor.
