Call for Livestock Made by Morrison

Fill North Carolina with pure bred cattle, swine and poultry and check the shipments of meats, poultry and eggs into the State.

Thus did Cameron Morrison, former Governor and Senator, and now private farmer and cattle breeder, sum up the great need of North Carolina agriculture in an address before the annual summer meeting of the Jersey Cattle Club held last week at State College.

Mr. Morrison urged the cattlemen present to band together to advertise their good animals so that the State might establish a reputation for its herds.

Isle of Jersey. "Farmers still form the great stabilizing influence in this country, and if ever it needs to be saved from demoralization and ruin, it will be the stable, God-fearing courageous people of the farms and villages who will save it," Governor Morrison declared.

He stated that another great need of North Carolina at present is a closely knit organization of farmers. They should organize for their own well-being, he said, and then they could secure anything that they wanted.
