will have to be followed even tho it will mean a year's delay for a number of children who will reach their sixth birthday after the first of October.

This year for the first time the State is distributing free basal texts to all elementary pupils and more than 50,000 such books have been distributed among the schools of the County or are stored in the County Book Room at Kenansville awaiting distribution. High school books will be on the rental list just as they were last year. There will not be enough writing, drawing, music, language, and some other books to distribute one book per child, but it is thought that the stock on hand will pretty well taken care of the needs this year. By not using one book per child of these titles, school authorities expect to be in position to get a good stock of new adoptions next year, especially language, health, and North Carolina history.

Duplin along with most of the other counties of the state is making it possible for its elementary pupils to pursue an adequate reading program this year by adopting plan B as recommended by the State Department. According to this plan first grade children will pay a rental fee of fifty cents for the use of six books during the year; second grade children fifty cents for the use of three books, and third grade children sixty cents for the use of three books. The fourth and fifth grades will pay sixty cents and the sixth and seventh grades seventy cents for the use of three books and a dictionary.

School authorities are hopeful that parents will take advantage of this opportunity at once in order that the books may be in use in a very few days.

For the convenience of parents and teachers the book room will be open for two weeks beginning August 30, Monday thru Friday, from three till four o'clock and throughout the school year on Saturdays from ten till twelve and Tuesdays three-fifteen to four.
