Blight

danger of damage from sun scald if tubers are left exposed to bright sunshine for more than 45 minutes after they are dug.

Late blight has not often been a serious problem in North Carolina in the past. It is an annual problem in the potato sections of the north, particularly the north-eastern seed-producing states and Canadian provinces. The disease is spread through the seed pieces. Though the number of affected seed pieces planted is very small, the disease spreads rapidly to healthy plants when weather conditions are satisfactory. A single diseased plant will produce enough football-shaped spores to infect thousands of plants. These spores are readily broken free from diseased leaves by splashing rain or wind.

The disease causes losses in two different ways: (1) yields are cut down when the leaves are destroyed; and (2) tubers in the soil may become infected by rain-carried spores or infected during harvest. Infected tubers may show no signs of the disease when packed and loaded, but rot may develop enroute to the market or after the potatoes are in the grocery store.

Catch Early

If caught early enough, late blight can be controlled by spraying or dusting the plants with fungicides. In most cases the spray or dust contains copper. Bordeaux mixture has been used in the northern states to control the disease. Fungicides that have proved satisfactory include: tribasic copper sulfate, copper oxychloride sulphate, copper A. Parzale and Dithane 78.

Since most North Carolina growers are equipped to dust for the Colorado potato beetle, they may find it handier to apply these fungicides in dust form.

Dr. Nielson says that copper fungicides should contain at least 6 to 7 per cent metallic copper; Parzale and Dithane 7.78 should contain 10 to 12 per cent active ingredients. Dust should be applied 30 pounds per acre at weekly intervals, and in the late evening or when foliage is wet with dew.

"If the weather turns warm, late blight will cease to be a serious problem," Dr. Nielson concludes. "Cool weather does not cause the disease, but these conditions are the ones on which the fungus thrives."

eight when Beaufort exploded for six runs. Hester stroled, and Kay Hassel laid down a bunt and was safe when the second baseman muffed it. Haves forced Hester at third, but three straight singles by Hooper, Wallace, and Gillikin brought in three more runs.

Dobbs was caught in a run-down between third and home on a grounder by Jim Hunnings, but was safe at the plate when the catcher dropped the throw. Hunnings reached second on the play, and both he and Gillikin tallied Beaufort's final runs on a single by Hester.

Marshallberg's last two runs in the last of the seventh. This was accomplished on a hit batsman followed by a triple by Harris, who came in on an error by the third baseman.

Taylor started and went the route for Beaufort for the win. Harris started for Marshallberg but was knocked out in the seventh and was replaced by Dave George. Harris came in from right field to pitch again in the ninth.

In winning, Beaufort collected 15 hits and made three errors. Marshallberg collected 10 safeties and made a similar number of mistakes.

Newport Commissioners

Recent complaints about poor lighting caused commissioners to consult Mr. Stovall. At present, regular house lights are being used in sockets designed to use street lights. Adapters are necessary, but these constantly burn out making lighting spotty and inefficient throughout the town.

If the town signs an agreement with the power company it will be for a five-year period with privilege of renewal. A 10-year contract permits 5 per cent discount. Mr. Stovall explained.

Mr. Millis who will survey the town will select two other men to work with him. Mayor A. R. Craig said. Mr. Millis was not present at Friday's meeting.

The power company manager also promised the commissioners assistance in installing two fire sirens, one at the town hall and the other, probably, in the locality of the school. Erection of one large siren at the town hall was thought unwise because all alarms would then have to be turned in at that point. A fire alarm box system would require too large an investment, it was pointed out.

George Ball, attorney for the town, reported that he was working on the application to the Reconstruction Finance corporation regarding issuance of bonds to obtain money for installation of a town water system. A resolution was passed authorizing the mayor to request a bond issue and to supply information to the attorney which is required by RFC.

An ordinance was passed requiring property owners to keep garbage on their own property rather than on the street and permission to sell beer was granted—Canady.

Commissioner Hendy Edwards ruefully reported that motorists were not buying their town tags. The board decided that a penalty would be imposed on all Newport residents who buy tags after July 1.

Because the present jail requires repairs, Commissioner Harold Wilton was appointed, with Mr. Edwards and Commissioner David McCain, to investigate cost of reconstruction.

As a result of Friday night's meeting the town bulletin board, now located just east of the railroad tracks and north of the highway, will be moved to the town lot next to Garner and McCain's.

The commissioners are scheduled to meet the first Tuesday of every month but this month's meeting was postponed four days.

The operation of the theatre was eventually taken over by the late R. T. Wade, who with his vision as to the future of the movies as an entertaining attraction, was instrumental in the erection of the present building of the City Theatre.

M. D. Burkenroad to Work On Oyster Bed Pollution

Martin D. Burkenroad, noted marine fisheries scientist, will leave on Friday for New Orleans where he will work on problems concerning oyster bed pollution in the vicinity of the Louisiana city.

He will be accompanied by his wife. The Burkenroads live on the Bogue Sound road.

He follows the Carteret county Methodist pastors left today for Duke university to attend the Methodist Pastor's school there this week: the Rev. L. A. Tilley, pastor First Methodist church, and the Rev. W. D. Caviness, pastor of Franklin Memorial church, both of Morehead City; the Rev. T. R. Jenkins, pastor of Ann Street Methodist Church, Beaufort; the Rev. H. L. Harrell, pastor of Straits Methodist church, Straits.

that all of the people who inhabit the trucks are related to each other or are very close friends. Daniels said that he himself has lived in this manner for six years.

He said, "I've been in Beaufort twice, the last time about four years ago. This is the first time I've ever stopped in Morehead City."
