Speaker Reports On Health State In Great Britain

Study and action on the community level to better medical care for all American citizens, was urged Tuesday afternoon by William J. Bird, national affairs advisor, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in the sixth of eight broadcasts over WMBL. Mr. Bird was presided by the Beaufort and Morehead chambers of commerce in cooperation with the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in the interest of better government through better citizenship.

America Is Healthy

Heralding America as one of the most healthy nations in the world, Mr. Bird said that continued progress in the medical field would not come through socializing medicine, but would depend upon the continuation of the American way of handling medical needs. He urged all citizens to work for an even more healthful America through voluntary medicine.

Relating observations of Americans recently returned from England, the speaker said the national health insurance plan now in operation in that country is in deep trouble.

"Britain had originally promised its citizens, for example, that socialized medicine would also pay for prescriptions," he said "but now Britain has levied a charge on all prescriptions, because everyone was running here and there with doctors' prescriptions, getting them filled for headaches, stimulants, backaches, real or imaginary."

190,000 Doctors In U. S.

Bird said with only 190,000 practicing doctors in America, that socializing medicine would not relieve the shortage of physicians, but would make it even more acute. He said this country needs more doctors, better distribution of medical facilities, and that socializing medicine isn't the answer.

"Of course one of the big things for us to consider in making up our minds on socialized medicine is what it would cost?" he said. "About three and one-half percent of income, divided equally between employer and employee, would be paid to government. This would come on top of payroll deductions for social security, income taxes, retirement benefits, etc."

Outlining a plan for community development of better medical care, instead of asking the federal government to do the job, Bird called on all citizens to improve the current American system of medicine, and not turn to a foreign system of medicine that is in trouble in other countries today.

Support Local Health Laws

"We should support desirable local health legislation in our communities. We should bring to the front any cases where citizens are not getting adequate medical treatment. Let's make every attempt to solve these cases on the local level where they exist and not run to Washington for an answer.

"Let's voluntarily make the proper provisions now without government compulsion, to take care of future medical bills. Let's keep our sights high! Let's remove the threat of socialized medicine so that we can unite and march forward together for an even greater and more healthful America," he concluded.
