

Three Famous Light Houses Warn Sailors

Cape Hatteras light, out of use for many years, was restored in 1949. This picture was made May 15, 1936, on the last morning before the light was moved inland two miles to a steel girder tower. The ocean threatened the light, but in the years following 1936 grassed dunes went on the offensive and pushed the ocean back, making restoration of this 190-foot brick tower possible. The reflections above are in a fresh water pond behind the light.

Ocracoke light house, in its setting of wind-molded live oaks and cedars, is one of the most attractive along the Atlantic coast.

Carteret county's own light house, Cape Lookout. On clear days this diamond-patterned light can be seen from a distance of 25 to 30 miles.

An Ancient Art Becomes an Industry

Net-making has always been an essential art in Carteret county. This picture, taken 15 years ago, shows women down-east busy at their net-making. Today there are three net companies in the county, one makes commercial fishing nets and the other two turn out all types of sports nets. Individual fishermen and their families, however, continue to make their own.
