The hallway leading to the main room was lighted with white candles and other decorations were of pine, cedar, and smilax. Only candlelight was used throughout the evening. Refreshments were served from a table, covered with lace cloth, which stood in front of the mantle banked with greenery. Centered on the mantle were a miniature bride and groom.

Three-branched silver candelabra, holding white tapers, were placed on the table where Mrs. John Bunn, wife of the pastor, served punch, and Mrs. Robert Wallace served cake. There were also nuts and mints. Assisting in serving were Mrs. Marcia Lewis, Mrs. Allen Broadhurst and Miss Anna Mae Broadhurst.

Guests were welcomed by Mrs. J. G. Bennett and Mrs. John Lashley. When Miss Wheaton and her mother arrived they were presented with corsages.

As Mrs. George Mizesko played the wedding march, the bride-to-be and her fiancé advanced to the spot where the pastor of the church, Dr. John H. Bunn, the superintendent of the Sunday school, Reginald Willis, and the director of church music, Ralph Wade, were waiting to honor them.

Mr. Willis presented the couple with a silver tray, a gift from the young people's department; Mr. Wade gave them pieces of silver in the bride's pattern, a gift from the choir, and Dr. Bunn commented on Miss Wheaton's faithful service to the church. She is a member of both the young people and adults' choir, pianist in the young people's department, and was organist on occasion at church this past summer.
