Tower May Topple in 2100

By Dr. Lorenzo Pipisa

Pisa, Italy.—(AP)—If you want to do what thousands of other Americans have done and be photographed in front of the Leaning Tower of Pisa, do it before 2,100 A.D.

Why? Because although the Tower has shown no dangerous new tilt lately, normal deterioration is expected to bring it tumbling down in about 150 years unless new restoration work is done.

However, for the present it is as safe as the Tower has been in years. Reports had circulated in the Italian press, after the recent North Italy floods, that the Tower had tilted further to a dangerous point.

No Immediate Danger "The old and solid tower is in no immediate danger of collapsing," said Dr. I. Noccioli, surveyor who daily checks the delicate seismographs and inclinometers inside the tower.

Some years ago, an extensive survey was made of the ground on which the Tower is built. The conclusion was that there is no danger that the Tower, whose foundations were laid in 1174, would collapse for 150 years.

The Tower leaned dangerously in 1175, when its construction had reached 33 feet from the ground. The ground gave way on its southern side for about 5 inches in depth. Architect Bonanno tried to correct the inclination by the fourth order of arches, but he did not succeed and gave up the construction.

Sixty years later the construction was resumed by Wilhelm of Innsbruck, who added another three orders of arches (floors) to the Tower. Like his predecessor he gave up.

In 1350, Tommaso Pisano completed the bell Tower, straightening it a little with respect of the rest of the building. The completed building was 132.2 feet on the southern side. Its present inclination is about one tenth of its height. Originally it was almost three feet less.

The first scientific studies on the inclination were made in 1817 by the English professors Grey and Taylor. France's Prof. Fleury conducted further studies towards the middle of the last century.

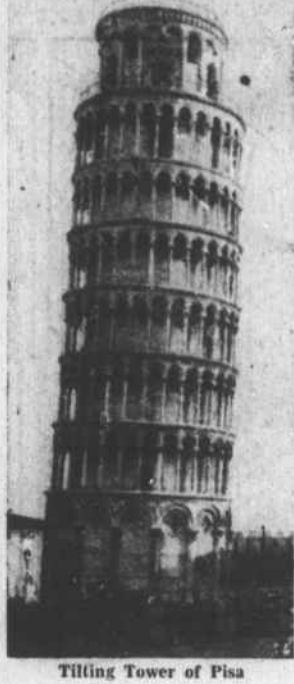

In the same period Italian architect Della Gerardesca dug out the basement of the Tower, which had been filled in by floods.

Concrete Injections Studies on how to consolidate the ground around the Tower were conducted in this century by Prof. Girometti and completed in 1932 by large cement and concrete injections.

A complete network of tunnels was dug. In the holes almost one ton of liquid cement was poured to reinforce the Tower foundations.

During the war, the U. S. 5th Army faced the Germans across the Arno river at Pisa for weeks. Several shells exploded near the Tower, although Allied soldiers carefully avoided shooting at it even when the Germans used it for an observation post.

As a result of the explosions, a slight tilt of seven-tenths of a millimeter was recorded after the war.

Chicago Puts Lincoln's Specs on Public Display Chicago—(AP)—Abraham Lincoln's spectacles for the first time are on public display. The Chicago Historical society acquired them for $275 from the Oliver R. Barrett Lincoln Collection. The magnifying type specs were used by Old Abe for reading. An eye specialist, Dr. Noah D. Fabricant, Chicago, said Lincoln probably had very good vision and started wearing the glasses when in his middle 40s.
