Pirate Dictates to Villian

"The Crimson Pirate" does the dictating in this scene from the new adventure epic distributed by Warner Bros. The Technicolor film, with Burt Lancaster as the star, and villain Leslie Bradley motivate the action of the story. Nick Cravat, Lancaster's acrobat buddy, is also importantly cast in "The Crimson Pirate."

Andrews Ignores Warnings

Bana Andrews plunges into danger despite the pleadings of Marta Toren and Audrey Ticker, left, in Columbia Pictures' "Assignment—Paris," which also stars George Sanders.

Broadway

By Mark Barron

New York — The Broadway stage has been a most lucrative career for pretty, interesting-looking Marian Winters. But she has a busier career which pays her nothing. A few years ago, when she was exciting cheers from the Broadway drama critics with her poignant portrayal of a trapped shoplifter in "Detective Story," she was walking along in Lower Manhattan one rainy day. She noticed a group of women going into a building and some of them were having trouble with their crying, ailing children. She went to assist the harrassed mothers... and soon found herself inside the Judson Health center, a famous clinic where underprivileged folk have found free medical care for 30 years. Thoughtful Miss Winters continued her Broadway stage career but all her spare hours are spent in voluntary service in the center.

After touring in "Detective Story" for six months, Miss Winters returned to Broadway. Almost immediately she found another colorful role in John Van Druten's successful play, "I Am a Camera," and she won more awards than she has room for on her mantelpiece. The New York Drama Critics circle gave her their award as the best supporting actress of the season. And similar citations went to her in the Donaldson Award, the Antoinette Perry Award and the Theater World Award.

"But my most treasured award I got from my husband," she said as she lifted up a tiny gold gadget swinging from a chain around her neck. "He gave me this the night I opened in 'I Am a Camera.'" A closer inspection showed that it was a tiny folding camera made of gold. It is about the size of one of the tiny gadgets you see on a girl's charm bracelet. It folds in and out like a regular camera. Where the lens is supposed to be, there is a small diamond.

Miss Winters said she got plenty of puns in her opening night telegrams for "I Am a Camera," such bon bon mots as "Hope everything clicks" and "I hope it's all in focus."

One thing she is very happy about is that "I Am a Camera" was one of the last plays to appear on Broadway in the historic Empire theater which will be torn down as soon as "The Time of the Cuckoo," which is currently playing there, ends its run.

Lake Baikal in Asia is said to be the deepest lake in the world.
